

Contents

---

|                                                                                                          |                |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------|
| Foreword                                                                                                 | page xi |
| Jan Mycielski                                                                                            |                |
| Addendum to the Foreword                                                                                 | xiii           |
| Preface                                                                                                  | xv             |
|                                                                                                      |                |
| Part One Paradoxical Decompositions, or the Nonexistenceof Finitely Additive Measures        |                |
| 1 Introduction                                                                                    | 3              |
| 1.1 Examples of Paradoxical Actions                                                                      | 4              |
| 1.2 Geometrical Paradoxes                                                                                | 8              |
| 2 The Hausdorff Paradox                                                                           | 14             |
| 3 The Banach–Tarski Paradox: Duplicating Spheres and Balls                                        | 23             |
| 4 Hyperbolic Paradoxes                                                                            | 36             |
| 4.1 The Hyperbolic Plane                                                                                 | 36             |
| 4.2 A Hyperbolic Hausdorff Paradox                                                                       | 38             |
| 4.3 A Banach–Tarski Paradox of the Whole Hyperbolic Plane                                                | 42             |
| 4.4 Paradoxes in an Escher Design                                                                        | 48             |
| 4.5 The Disappearing Hyperbolic Squares                                                                  | 51             |
| 4.6 A Bounded Hyperbolic Paradox                                                                         | 53             |
| 5 Locally Commutative Actions: Minimizing the Numberof Pieces in a Paradoxical Decomposition | 62             |
| 5.1 A Minimal Decomposition of a Sphere                                                                  | 62             |
| 5.2 A Minimal Decomposition of a Solid Ball                                                              | 66             |
| 5.3 General Systems of Congruences                                                                       | 69             |
| 6 Higher Dimensions                                                                               | 78             |
| 6.1 Euclidean Spaces                                                                                     | 78             |
| 6.2 Non-Euclidean Spaces                                                                                 | 86             |
| 6.3 Tetrahedral Chains                                                                                   | 88             |

|                                                                                                   |     |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| 7 Free Groups of Large Rank: Getting a Continuum of Spheres from One                       | 93  |
| 7.1 Large Free Groups of Isometries                                                               | 93  |
| 7.2 Large Free Semigroups of Isometries                                                           | 107 |
| 7.3 Sets Congruent to Proper Subsets                                                              | 109 |
| 8 Paradoxes in Low Dimensions                                                              | 116 |
| 8.1 Paradoxes in the Plane                                                                        | 116 |
| 8.2 Paradoxes of the Real Line                                                                    | 126 |
| 9 Squaring the Circle                                                                      | 133 |
| 9.1 Changing the Group                                                                            | 133 |
| 9.2 The Squaring of the Circle                                                                    | 135 |
| 9.3 Generalizations and Open Problems                                                             | 162 |
| 10 The Semigroup of Equidecomposability Types                                              | 168 |
| 10.1 The Semigroup of Equidecomposability Types                                                   | 168 |
| 10.2 A Cancellation Law                                                                           | 175 |
| 10.3 Restrictions on the Pieces                                                                   | 178 |
| Part Two Finitely Additive Measures, or the Nonexistence of Paradoxical Decompositions |     |
| 11 Transition                                                                              | 193 |
| 11.1 Tarski's Theorem                                                                             | 193 |
| 11.2 The Marczewski Problem: A Paradox Using Baire Sets                                           | 199 |
| 11.3 Equidecomposability with Countably Many Pieces                                               | 207 |
| 12 Measures in Groups                                                                      | 219 |
| 12.1 Amenable Groups                                                                              | 219 |
| 12.2 Classes of Groups                                                                            | 223 |
| 12.3 Invariant Measures                                                                           | 225 |
| 12.4 Characterizations of Amenability                                                             | 230 |
| 12.5 Topological Amenability                                                                      | 243 |
| 13 Applications of Amenability                                                             | 247 |
| 13.1 Exotic Measures                                                                              | 247 |
| 13.2 Paradoxes modulo an Ideal                                                                    | 257 |
| 13.3 How to Eliminate Exotic Measures in $\mathbb{R}^2$                                           | 259 |
| 13.4 Paradoxes Using Measurable Pieces                                                            | 261 |
| 13.5 Characterizing Isometry Groups That Yield Paradoxes                                          | 262 |
| 14 Growth Conditions in Groups and Supramenability                                         | 270 |
| 14.1 Supramenable Groups                                                                          | 270 |
| 14.2 Bounded Paradoxical Sets                                                                     | 273 |
| 14.3 Group Growth                                                                                 | 282 |
| 14.4 Cogrowth and Amenability                                                                     | 291 |

|                                                             |     |
|-------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| Contents                                                    | ix  |
| 15 The Role of the Axiom of Choice                   | 296 |
| 15.1 The Axiom of Choice Is Essential                       | 296 |
| 15.2 The Axiom of Choice Can Sometimes Be Eliminated        | 306 |
| 15.3 Foundational Implications of the Banach–Tarski Paradox | 308 |
| Appendices                                           |     |
| A Euclidean Transformation Groups                    | 315 |
| B Jordan Measure                                     | 320 |
| C Graph Theory                                       | 322 |
| Bibliography                                                | 325 |
| List of Symbols                                             | 339 |
| Index                                                       | 343 |