Contents

List of figures vii
List of tables viii
Acknowledgements ix
Introduction 1

Part I Setting the scene: theory, methodology and context 19
1 Conceptualizing ‘peace education’ in conflict-affected societies 21
2 Designing a peace education research project 39
3 The emergence of the new peace initiative in the context of Greek-Cypriot education policy 55

Part II Teachers’ responses to a peace education initiative 77
4 Teachers’ interpretations of the transition to the new policy initiative 79
5 Teachers’ stances and repertoires towards reconciliation 99
6 Teachers’ difficulties and emotions towards the new policy initiative 111

Part III Mapping teachers’ practices in a changing context 131
7 The schooling of emotion and memory in classroom interaction 133
vi Contents

8 Talking about peace and conflict in a (super)diverse classroom 151

Part IV The impact of teacher training workshops 171
9 Handling teachers’ discomfort during peace education workshops 173
10 Doing ‘leftist propaganda’ or working towards peace? Responding to teachers’ resistance 197
11 Moving towards critical ambivalence: enduring reservations and signs of change 209
   Epilogue 235

Appendices 241
References 247
Index 266