CONTENTS

Acknowledgements page x

Table of cases xii

Table of treaties and legislation xxiii

1 Introduction 1

2 Protection of employees in private international law 17

2.1. Reasons for protecting employees in private international law 19

2.1.1. Shortcomings of party autonomy: freedom of contract 21

2.1.2. Shortcomings of party autonomy: economic efficiency 23

2.1.3. Shortcomings of party autonomy: legal certainty 25

2.1.4. Systemic perspective: legitimate interests of states 26

2.1.5. Systemic perspective: the EU context 29

2.1.6. Conclusion 34

2.2. Employees protected in private international law 35

2.3. Protecting employees by choice-of-law rules 38

2.3.1. Protection of employees and party autonomy 39

2.3.2. Protection of employees and the law applicable in the absence of choice 44

2.4. Protecting employees by jurisdictional rules 49

2.5. Conclusions 54
3 Individual employment contracts’ in private international law 56

3.1. The genealogy of the term ‘individual employment contracts’ 58

3.2. Autonomous or domestic interpretation? 62

3.3. Who is the employee? 69
   3.3.1. Elements of an autonomous definition: comparative analysis 70
   3.3.2. Elements of an autonomous definition: substantive EU law 78
   3.3.3. Conclusion 82

3.4. Who is the employer? 83

3.5. Conclusions 89

4 Jurisdiction 91

4.1. Evolution of the European rules of jurisdiction in employment matters 95

4.2. Importance, in practice, of jurisdictionally preferring claimant employees 100

4.3. Claimant employees versus claimants in general: is the objective of protection of employees yet to be attained? 106
   4.3.1. Employer’s domicile versus domicile of defendants in general 106
   4.3.2. Habitual place of work versus place of provision of services 109
      4.3.2.1. Habitual place of work 109
      4.3.2.2. Place of provision of services 115
      4.3.2.3. Conclusion 118
   4.3.3. Engaging place of business 120
   4.3.4. Branches, agencies and other establishments 124
   4.3.5. Other non-consensual jurisdictional bases 126
   4.3.6. Jurisdiction agreements 126
   4.3.7. Conclusion 128

4.4. How to achieve protection of employees? 129
   4.4.1. Improving the existing rules 129
5 Choice of law: contractual claims 137

5.1. Evolution of the European choice-of-law rules for employment contracts 139

5.2. Party autonomy and its limitations 140
  5.2.1. Choosing the applicable law 140
    5.2.1.1. Express choice 141
    5.2.1.2. Tacit choice 142
    5.2.1.3. Severance (dépeçage) 143
    5.2.1.4. Contracts without foreign or non-EU elements 144
  5.2.2. Limitations of party autonomy 144
    5.2.2.1. Relevant mandatory provisions 144
    5.2.2.2. Sources of mandatory provisions 147
    5.2.2.3. Situations in which the mandatory provisions of the objectively applicable law apply 149
    5.2.2.4. Comparing the chosen law and the objectively applicable law 150
    5.2.2.5. Role of the courts 152
  5.2.3. Conclusion 154

5.3. Law applicable in the absence of choice 155
  5.3.1. Habitual place of work 156
    5.3.1.1. Postings abroad 157
    5.3.1.2. Intra-group transfers 161
    5.3.1.3. ‘Transnational occupations’ 162
  5.3.2. Engaging place of business 167
  5.3.3. Escape clause 174
  5.3.4. Conclusion 177

5.4. Conclusions 177

6 Choice of law: statutory claims 179

6.1. Territorial scope of British employment legislation 181
  6.1.1. Statutory rights 181
    6.1.1.1. Employment Rights Act 1996 181
6.1.1.2. Equality Act 2010 189
6.1.1.3. Other statutes 190
6.1.2. Contractual rights 192
6.1.3. EU law-derived rights 195

6.2. The importance of choice of law 201
6.2.2. 'European' choice-of-law rules and the boundaries within which British employment legislation applies 206
6.2.3. Should the Lawson v. Serco approach be abandoned? 214

6.3. Conclusions 219

7 Choice of law: tortious claims 221
7.1. Concurrent causes of action in choice of law 222
7.1.1. The common law 223
7.1.2. A procedural issue? 225
7.1.3. Does European private international law allow concurrent causes of action in choice of law? 229
7.1.4. Rome I and Rome II and concurrent causes of action in choice of law 241
7.1.5. Conclusion 247
7.2. Exemption clauses 247
7.2.1. The common law 248
7.2.2. Rome I and Rome II 250

7.3 Conclusions 252

8 Posting of workers in Europe 254
8.1. Posted Workers Directive: at the crossroad of competing interests 261
8.2. Enforcing the Posted Workers Directive 273
8.2.1. (In)effectiveness of public enforcement 274
8.2.2. (In)effectiveness of collective enforcement 280
8.2.3. Conclusion 285
8.3. Private enforcement of the Posted Workers Directive in England 286
8.3.1. A receiving perspective 286
CONTENTS

8.3.2. A sending perspective 294
8.4 Conclusions 298

9 Conclusion 300

Bibliography 307
Index 327