

The Cambridge Handbook of the Psychology of Prejudice

The Cambridge Handbook of the Psychology of Prejudice aims to answer the questions: Why is prejudice so persistent? How does it affect people exposed to it? And what can we do about it? Providing a comprehensive examination of prejudice from its evolutionary beginnings and environmental influences through to its manifestations and consequences, this handbook is an essential resource for scholars and students who are passionate about understanding prejudice, social change, collective action, and prejudice reduction. Featuring cutting-edge research from top scholars in the field, the chapters provide an overview of psychological models of prejudice; investigate prejudice in specific domains such as race, religion, gender, and appearance; and develop explicit, evidence-based strategies for disrupting the processes that produce and maintain prejudice. This handbook challenges researchers and readers to move beyond their comfort zone and sets the agenda for future avenues of research, policy, and intervention.

DR. CHRIS G. SIBLEY is a researcher in social psychology and founder of the New Zealand Attitudes and Values Study (NZAVS), a twenty-year longitudinal national probability study of social attitudes, personality, and health outcomes across New Zealand. As an author of over 200 peer-reviewed articles and book chapters, he was identified as a “Rising Star” by the Association for Psychological Science in 2011 and received the Erik Erikson Early Career Award in 2014 from the International Society of Political Psychology. He is a long-time collaborator of Dr. Fiona Kate Barlow and currently holds an Associate Professorship at the University of Auckland, New Zealand.

DR. FIONA KATE BARLOW is a social psychologist specializing in the study of race relations. From 2012 to 2014, she held an Australian Research Council early career fellowship, and in 2016 accepted an Australian Research Council Future Fellowship Award. She is the recipient of the 2013 Society for Australasian Social Psychology Early Career

Researcher Award. During the majority of her role as co-editor of this handbook she was a Senior Lecturer at the School of Applied Psychology and Menzies Health Institute Queensland at Griffith University, Queensland, Australia. She is currently a Senior Research Fellow at the School of Psychology at the University of Queensland.

Figures

3.1	Classification of social psychological theories of prejudice.	page 49
4.1	Ingroup projection and perceived projection by outgroups.	71
4.2	Complex representations of the superordinate group.	77
4.3	Schematic map of the ingroup projection model.	81
7.1	Intergroup threat model.	132
8.1	Schematic overview of social dominance theory (from Pratto, Sidanius, & Levin, 2006).	151
9.1	A dual process motivational model of the impact of personality, social environment, and social worldview beliefs on the two ideological attitude dimensions of right-wing authoritarianism (RWA) and social dominance orientation (SDO) and corresponding prejudice-related outcomes.	191
9.2	A dual process motivational model of how intergroup or situational dynamics activate dual motivational goals expressed in the ideological attitudes of RWA and SDO to generate outgroup perceptions that result in outgroup prejudice.	202
10.1	Path diagram demonstrating the degree of resemblance between identical/monozygotic (MZ) and nonidentical/dizygotic (DZ) twins for additive genetic (A), shared environmental (C), and residual (E) influences. Phenotypic variance (equal for each twin pair) is influenced by latent factors A , C , and E . The variance associated with these factors is shared between twin pairs at varying magnitudes based on the zygosity of the twin pair and the characteristics of the factor itself. MZ twins share 100% of the variance caused by A , whereas DZ twins share half this influence. C is shared equally at 100% between identical and nonidentical twin pairs. By definition, E is the remaining unique variance in the phenotype not explained by A and C combined.	226
11.1	Implicit Association Test procedure.	248
11.2	Priming procedure.	249
11.3	Go/No-Go Association Test procedure.	251
18.1	Acculturation strategies of ethno-cultural groups and the larger society (Berry, 2003).	421

18.2	Multilevel integrative framework for the cross-cultural study of prejudice and discrimination against immigrants (adapted from Guimond et al., 2014).	427
19.1	A schematic illustration of variance components in prejudice and theoretical perspectives explaining them.	447
19.2	A schematic illustration of devaluation of groups perceived as symbolically or realistically threatening a societal “order.” Alternative conceptualizations of the facets are possible (such as security/norms and competition/derogation), but the emphasis here is on the overarching communalities.	454
22.1	The self-regulation of prejudice model.	505
24.1	Example of variations in perceived stereotypicality. The given target’s appearance has been digitally altered to appear low (a), medium (b), or high (c) in perceived stereotypicality.	546
24.2	Contextual model of eyewitness identification in which the crime type affects eyewitness identification via stereotype activation. Estimator and system variables moderate this relationship at separate stages of the identification process (adapted from Osborne & Davies, 2014).	550
25.1	Multiple pathways linking discrimination to ill health (adapted from Paradies et al., 2013).	565

Tables

1.1	Historical overview of the major paradigms in the social scientific study of prejudice (from Duckitt, 2010).	page 5
8.1	Social psychological domains in which social dominance theory has been applied (since 2005).	153
10.1	Variance component estimates for items on the Wilson-Patterson Conservatism scale (Wilson & Patterson, 1968, as reported in Martin et al., 1986).	228
10.2	Variance component estimates for items on the Wilson-Patterson Conservatism scale (Wilson & Patterson, 1968, as reported in Alford et al., 2005).	229
13.1	The Ambivalent Sexism Inventory (ASI).	297
14.1	Summary of key points demonstrating that intimate relationships are central to understanding the emergence, function, and consequences of men's sexist attitudes toward women.	322
14.2	Summary of key points demonstrating that intimate relationships are central to understanding the emergence, function, and consequences of women's sexist attitudes toward women.	323
19.1	Descriptions of generalized prejudice (or ethnocentrism in studies primarily focusing on correlated prejudices, i.e., generalized prejudice).	441
21.1	Two models of social change.	490
23.1	Predictions made by information search model (Vorauer, 2006) regarding pragmatic and self-evaluative importance attached to outgroup's perspective.	523
27.1	Features of the implementation of the intervention.	615
27.2	Summary of research findings assessing the impact of reconciliation radio dramas in Rwanda, Burundi, and the DRC.	618
