Reporting the First World War

Charles Repington was Britain’s most influential military correspondent during the first two decades of the twentieth century. From 1914 to 1918, Repington’s commentary in The Times, ‘The War Day by Day’, was read and discussed by opinion-shapers and decision-makers worldwide who sought to better understand the momentous events happening around them, and his subsequently published diaries offered a compelling portrait of England’s governing class at war. This is the first major study of Repington’s life and career from the Boer War to the end of the Great War. A. J. A. Morris presents unique insights into the conduct of the First World War and into leading figures in the British high command: French, Haig, Robertson, Wilson. The book offers modern readers a rewardingly fresh understanding of the conflict, and will appeal to scholars of the First World War and British political and military history of the period.

Cambridge Military Histories

Edited by HEW STRACHAN,
Chichele Professor of the History of War, University of Oxford and Fellow of All Souls College, Oxford

GEOFFREY WAWRO,
Professor of Military History, and Director of the Military History
Center, University of North Texas

The aim of this series is to publish outstanding works of research on warfare throughout the ages and throughout the world. Books in the series take a broad approach to military history, examining war in all its military, strategic, political and economic aspects. The series complements Studies in the Social and Cultural History of Modern Warfare by focusing on the ‘hard’ military history of armies, tactics, strategy and warfare. Books in the series consist mainly of single author works – academically rigorous and groundbreaking – which are accessible to both academics and the interested general reader.

A full list of titles in the series can be found at:

www.cambridge.org/militaryhistories
Reporting the First World War: Charles Repington, The Times and the Great War, 1914–1918

A. J. A. Morris

University of Ulster
For CIS
LVII
Grow old along with me
For the best is yet to be.
Contents

List of figures
Preface
List of abbreviations

Introduction

Part I: The years of preparation, 1903–1914

1 A new profession
2 Kitchener’s champion
3 Esher’s War Office reforms
4 Arnold Forster lays the foundation for the General Staff
5 Anglo-French military conversations
6 Finding suitable generals
7 Invasion
8 Repington helps Haldane
9 Conscription
10 Northcliffe and The Times, Repington and the Army Review
11 The Curragh incident
12 Are the army and navy prepared for war?

Part II: The war years, 1914–1918

13 The 1915 shells scandal
14 How do we secure the necessary troops?
15 Changing the old guard
Figures

1 Major Charles à Court, 1898 (aged 40)
2 C. B. Moberly Bell (1847–1911) (The Times)
3 Sir Valentine Chirol (1852–1929) (The Times)
4 Admiral Sir John 'Jacky' Fisher (1841–1920)
5 Field Marshal Lord 'Bobs' Roberts (1832–1914)
6 Alfred Harmsworth, Viscount Northcliffe (1865–1922) (The Times)
7 George Earle Buckle (1854–1935) (The Times)
8 J. E. B. Seely (1868–1947)
9 Lieutenant Colonel Charles à Court Repington, 1916 (aged 58)
10 Lieutenant General Sir John Cowans (1862–1921)
12 Field Marshal Sir William 'Wully' Robertson (1859–1933)
13 James Louis 'Jim' Garvin (1868–1947)
14 Field Marshal Sir Henry Hughes Wilson (1864–1922)
15 Repington and his little book: as caricatured by Max Beerbohm (© The Estate of Max Beerbohm)
Preface

Colonel Repington’s war was the Great War of 1914–1918. His contemporaries referred to it as the Last, or European War. Quite deliberately he chose ‘The First World War’ as the title for his wartime diaries, and so provided that dreadful engagement’s lasting, most familiar name. Critics claimed it was unduly cynical of him to imply there would be other world wars. He retorted, history had taught him nations were unlikely to stop waging war one with another. He preferred to acknowledge reality rather than indulge in wishful thinking and millennial rhetoric.

For the first two decades of the twentieth century he was the most influential military writer in the country. On questions of defence he was unmatched as a critic and communicator. From 1914 to 1918, his commentary in The Times, ‘The War Day by Day’, was read, dissected and discussed by opinion shapers and decision makers world-wide. A familiar coterie – ministers, statesmen, civil servants, soldiers and sailors – provided him with a constant supply of reliable information. His military informants were for the most part friends or acquaintances from his army days. Sir John French was a close personal friend, but his relationship with Douglas Haig, who succeeded French as C-in-C of the British Expeditionary Force, was never better than reserved. Haig knew that Repington questioned his capacity to command. He resented particularly the military correspondent’s effrontery in daring to question his decisions.

Repington generally enjoyed excellent relations with the British and Allied high commands, but he thoroughly distrusted and disliked Henry Wilson. Had Repington not been obliged to leave the army, for which he blamed Wilson, many believed he, not Wilson, would have become Chief of the Imperial Staff.

Much of his writing received extravagant praise and was widely cited with approval. However he never lacked critics, as eager to censure the man as they were contemptuous and disdainful of his opinions. The publication of his wartime diaries in 1920 became the catalyst of this critical opprobrium. Did he really deserve either approval or censure in such immoderate measure? Were his critics justified in characterising him as a too clever by half, unpatriotic scoundrel? Was the messenger disapproved simply because his message was disapproved? Neither friend nor foe lightly ignored or forgot what Repington chose to say about them. He was well named ‘Io’s gadfly’, for his criticisms were intended to goad and sting.

The Radical Liberal editor Henry Massingham, in an attempt to diminish the influence of a troublesome and persistent critic, characterised him as a narcissistic dandy, ‘the gorgeous Wreckington’. The Unionist editor J. L. Garvin, in the course of a mendacious, abusive tirade, scornfully dismissed Repington as ‘the Duke of Yellington’. Lloyd George did not scruple to question the military correspondent’s patriotism, shamelessly asserting that Repington had been prepared to put his country’s security at risk to satisfy his own selfish ends. Why should an ex-prime minister indulge in such bitter, slanderous recrimination a decade after the journalist’s death?

A happy coincidence – gaining access to The Times’ archive that contained many of Repington’s letters, and the simultaneous discovery of a battered, second-hand copy of his wartime diaries – persuaded me the life of this soldier turned journalist offered the possibility for an unusually well-documented account of military–press relations in the first decades of the twentieth century.

Over the years many friends, far more knowledgeable than I, have generously and readily responded to my requests for help and advice. Were I to list them all, their number would challenge the number of names in a typical index of one of Repington’s books. I hope, therefore, it will be understood why I mention only those who have helped most directly. The greatest debt I owe to Michael Chapman, who, ever uncomplaining and patient, has provided detailed answers to my endless questions. Celia Lee first pointed out to me the treasure-trove of Jean Hamilton’s diaries, which I otherwise would most certainly have missed, and kindly provided me with the relevant transcripts. Michael Ackroyd generously volunteered facts and photographs from his unrivalled collection of materials pertaining to Amington Hall and the Repington family. I also thank those friends and colleagues who at different times have read early drafts of chapters and patiently pointed out the mistakes and blemishes: Bruce Murray, Noel Garson, Andrew Porter, Michael Howard, Keith Jeffery, Roger Stearn, Samuel Hynes and Alistair Irwin. The late John Grigg was always a present help and unfailing source of excellent advice, as were the late John Keegan and my much missed, lifelong friend and mentor, John Griffith. Anthony helped pick up the pieces when I faltered in my task and first introduced me to the undoubted benefits of the computer. For saving the text, and on occasion my sanity, as a consequence of unplanned ‘adventures’ caused by the transfer from my familiar, battered typewriter to modern technology, I owe much to the skills of my saintly friend, Jay Diamond.

Finally, as ever, my heartfelt thanks to Cis. Without her constant support I doubt whether this book would ever have been completed.

A. J. A. Morris

Clun
Abbreviations

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Abbreviation</th>
<th>Full Form</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>AC</td>
<td>Army Council</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>AEF</td>
<td>American Expeditionary Force</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>AG</td>
<td>Adjutant General</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>BEF</td>
<td>British Expeditionary Force</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>C-B</td>
<td>Sir Henry Campbell Bannerman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>C-in-C</td>
<td>Commander-in-Chief</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CD</td>
<td>Defence Committee</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CID</td>
<td>Committee of Imperial Defence</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CGS</td>
<td>Chief of the General Staff</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CIGS</td>
<td>Chief of Imperial General Staff</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>DAAG</td>
<td>Deputy Assistant Adjutant General</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>DGO</td>
<td>Director General of Ordnance</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>DMI</td>
<td>Director of Military Intelligence</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>DMO</td>
<td>Director of Military Operations</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>DNI</td>
<td>Director of Naval Intelligence</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>GHQ</td>
<td>General Headquarters</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>GOC</td>
<td>General Officer Commanding</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>GQG</td>
<td>Le Grand Quartier Général/French General Staff</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>HQ</td>
<td>Headquarters</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LG</td>
<td>David Lloyd George</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>MP</td>
<td>Morning Post</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>NDA</td>
<td>National Defence Association</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>NID</td>
<td>Naval Intelligence Department</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>NSL</td>
<td>National Service League</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>PHS</td>
<td>Printing House Square</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>PM</td>
<td>Prime Minister</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>psa</td>
<td>pass staff college</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>QMG</td>
<td>Quartermaster General</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>RA</td>
<td>Royal Artillery</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>RE</td>
<td>Royal Engineers</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>RFC</td>
<td>Royal Flying Crops</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
List of abbreviations

- SWC  Supreme War Council
- TF   Territorial Force
- USN  United States Navy
- UVF  Ulster Volunteer Force
- VC   Victoria Cross