Comparative Defamation and Privacy Law

Defamation and privacy are now two central issues in media law. While defamation law has long posed concerns for media publications, the emergence of privacy as a legal challenge has been relatively recent in many common law jurisdictions outside the US. A number of jurisdictions have seen recent defamation and privacy law reforms, which have often drawn on, or reacted against, developments elsewhere. This timely book examines topical issues in defamation and privacy law focussed on media, journalism and contemporary communication. Aimed at a wide legal audience, it brings together leading and emerging analysts of media law to address current and proposed reforms and the impact of changes in communication environments and to re-examine basic principles such as harm and free speech. This book will be of interest to all those working on commonwealth or US law, as well as comparative scholars from wider jurisdictions.

ANDREW T. KENYON is Professor of Law and a Director of the Centre for Media and Communications Law at the University of Melbourne, Australia.

It has been a privilege to work with academic colleagues from five common law countries in developing this collection. Contributions address issues in defamation and privacy law, examining UK, US, Canadian, New Zealand and Australian developments. The project was made possible through support from the Australian Research Council and its Discovery programme (Kenyon DP0985337). A two-day workshop was held at the Centre for Media and Communications Law at the University of Melbourne, Australia, where almost all contributors participated, along with further colleagues whose valuable contributions greatly helped the final development of the chapters, participated. Many thanks to everyone who took part, as well as to those whose work is seen in the pages that follow; thanks also to Roy Baker, Eric Descheemaeker, Steve Friedland, Lyrisa Lidsky, Barbara McDonald and Andrew Roberts. Wide-ranging debate and discussion at the workshop led to revised chapters and substantially improved the final collection.

Thanks to all at Cambridge University Press for their support of the publication; to James Nunez and Hamish Carr, who assisted me with some of the editorial tasks; and to the Melbourne Law School for its continuing support of the Centre for Media and Communications Law. But above all, thanks to the contributors for their thought, care and engagement in addressing a range of evolving and challenging issues in media law.

As readers will see, a wide range of views are presented in the chapters that follow, and it should be clear that I could not agree with all of them. Given my interest in diverse public speech, however, it should not be surprising that I think it is valuable for these varied analyses to be presented. I hope readers also find much of value in the work.
