The Work and Lives of Teachers offers a simple but original argument: that the cultural attitudes toward the teaching profession measurably influence how students perform. Cohen uses both ethnographic portraits and personal accounts from thirteen teachers – from Finland, Taiwan, Greece, Azerbaijan, France, Chile, South Africa, Siberia, Brazil, Romania, Philippines, Norway, and the United States – to explore the meaning and value of teaching worldwide. This study includes the ways in which teachers in these countries are educated, recruited, compensated, and perceived by parents, students, administrators, and the culture at large. Teachers’ voices, so rarely heard in international educational studies, are front and center here, highlighting the daily work in the classroom and the pleasures and struggles of engaging in the teaching profession in 2016. The lesson, briefly stated, is that societies are only as good as the people who teach in them.

Rosetta Marantz Cohen is a professor in the Department of Education and Child Study at Smith College, where she holds the Sylvia Dluglasch Bauman Chair in American Studies. She serves as Director of the Kahn Liberal Arts Institute at Smith and Director of the Smith College Internship Program at the Smithsonian Museum.
The Work and Lives of Teachers

A GLOBAL PERSPECTIVE

Rosetta Marantz Cohen

Smith College

Cambridge University Press
978-1-107-13574-1 — The Work and Lives of Teachers
Rosetta Marantz Cohen
Frontmatter

© in this web service Cambridge University Press
www.cambridge.org
For Ruth, Samuel and Elizabeth

Great teachers: past, present, and future
Contents

Acknowledgments ............................................................... page ix

Introduction: The Work and Lives of Teachers .................. 1

1 Finland: Autonomy and Respect .......................................... 17
2 Taiwan: Tradition and Change .......................................... 40
3 Greece: A Week of Austerity ............................................. 57
4 Azerbaijan: Teaching in the Shadow of War ..................... 75
5 France: Defending Rigor .................................................. 97
6 Chile: Revolution and Resignation .................................... 122
7 The United States: Diversity and a Passion for Leadership .... 141
8 Conclusion: The Teacher in Comparative Perspective ........ 163
9 Teachers in Their Own Words .......................................... 188

Notes .................................................................................. 217
Index .................................................................................. 227

vii
Acknowledgments

I am indebted to many people in helping me develop and shape these portraits. Colleagues, family, and friends read or heard presentations on these chapters, offering advice and encouragement. Thank you especially to Carrie McGee, Craig Murphy, Nate Berry, Patti Lessard, Christie George, Sujane Wu, Janie Vanpee, Carl Geupal, Sam Intrator, Aachal Khanna, Ahalya Raman, Fran Fahey, Ann Cleaveland, Paula Marantz Cohen, and to the editorial and production staff, David Repetto, Ezhilmaran Sugumaran, and Stephanie Sakson. I am also deeply grateful to Smith College for providing research funds and for nurturing my development as a scholar and teacher for more than twenty-five years.

The book would not have been possible without the assistance of the Institute for Training and Development in Amherst, Massachusetts, and especially its wonderful co-executive director, Julie Hooks, who first introduced me to several of these teachers and who accompanied me on my trip to Azerbaijan. I am indebted to Julie for her unflagging support throughout the project and for the friendship that has emerged from it.

Sam Scheer, husband and teacher extraordinaire, is at the heart of this book. Sam’s insights about teachers and teaching formed the basis for the book’s thesis. Indeed, everything I have ever written about education has been improved and sharpened by his keen editorial eye and his ability to wisely reflect on the profession and his own work in the classroom.

Finally, and most of all, I am grateful to the teachers profiled here. I am thankful to them for letting me into their classrooms and their private lives, for tolerating, at every turn, my e-mails and requests. In every case, the subjects of these chapters co-developed their profiles alongside me, reading and critiquing first the transcripts of their lengthy interviews and, second, the first drafts of my portraits. Portraiture is a wonderful but tricky enterprise. The portraitist sees things necessarily through the filter of her own life and experience, and the subject – if she is to be involved throughout the process – must ultimately accept that subjectivity, correcting blatant misapprehension while tolerating the ethnographer’s idiosyncratic eye. I am deeply grateful to Annukka, Feng-juan, Vasso, Gulnaz, Laurence, Mauricio, and Bonnie for their time, enthusiasm, and generosity throughout this process.