

Social Media and Morality

Is social media changing who we are? We assume social media is only a tool for our modern-day communications and interactions, but is it quietly changing who we are and how we see the world and one another? Our current debate about the human behaviors behind social media misses the important effects these social networking technologies are having on our sense of shared morality and investigates the reasons behind it. This book reconsiders our usual regulatory and developmental approach and suggests a new methodological inquiry to inform a new direction in our understanding for these increasingly important technologies.

Lisa S. Nelson is an associate professor at the University of Pittsburgh Graduate School of Public and International Affairs, and is a former appointee with the Department of Homeland Security's Data Privacy and Integrity Advisory Committee. Professor Nelson is a National Science Foundation award recipient, a MacArthur grant recipient, and is the author of America Identified: Biometric Technology and Society (2011).
