

Cambridge University Press
978-1-107-18387-2 — Romanticism and Theatrical Experience
Jonathan Mulrooney
Frontmatter
More Information

ROMANTICISM AND THEATRICAL EXPERIENCE

Bringing together studies in theater history, print culture, and literature, this book offers a new consideration of Romantic-period writing in Britain. Recovering a wide range of theatrical criticism from newspapers and periodicals, some of it overlooked since its original publication in Regency London, Jonathan Mulrooney explores new contexts for the work of the actor Edmund Kean, essayist William Hazlitt, and poet John Keats. Kean's ongoing presence as a figure in the theatrical news presented readers with a provocative reimagining of personal subjectivity and a reworking of the British theatrical tradition. Hazlitt and Keats, in turn, imagined the essayist and the poet along similar theatrical lines, reframing Romantic prose and poetics. Taken together, these case studies illustrate not only theater's significance to early nineteenth-century Londoners but also the importance of theater's textual legacies for our own reassessment of "Romanticism" as a historical and cultural phenomenon.

JONATHAN MULROONEY is Professor of English at the College of the Holy Cross in Worcester, Massachusetts.

Cambridge University Press
 978-1-107-18387-2 — Romanticism and Theatrical Experience
 Jonathan Mulrooney
 Frontmatter
More Information

CAMBRIDGE STUDIES IN ROMANTICISM

Founding Editor

Marilyn Butler, University of Oxford

General Editor

James Chandler, University of Chicago

Editorial Board

John Barrell, University of York
 Paul Hamilton, University of London
 Mary Jacobus, University of Cambridge
 Claudia Johnson, Princeton University
 Alan Liu, University of California, Santa Barbara
 Jerome McGann, University of Virginia
 David Simpson, University of California, Davis

This series aims to foster the best new work in one of the most challenging fields within English literary studies. From the early 1780s to the early 1830s, a formidable array of talented men and women took to literary composition, not just in poetry, which some of them famously transformed, but in many modes of writing. The expansion of publishing created new opportunities for writers, and the political stakes of what they wrote were raised again by what Wordsworth called those ‘great national events’ that were ‘almost daily taking place’: the French Revolution, the Napoleonic and American wars, urbanization, industrialization, religious revival, an expanded empire abroad, and the reform movement at home. This was an enormous ambition, even when it pretended otherwise. The relations between science, philosophy, religion, and literature were reworked in texts such as Frankenstein and Biographia Literaria; gender relations in A Vindication of the Rights of Woman and Don Juan; journalism by Cobbett and Hazlitt; and poetic form, content, and style by the Lake School and the Cockney School. Outside Shakespeare studies, probably no body of writing has produced such a wealth of commentary or done so much to shape the responses of modern criticism. This indeed is the period that saw the emergence of those notions of literature and of literary history, especially national literary history, on which modern scholarship in English has been founded.

The categories produced by Romanticism have also been challenged by recent historicist arguments. The task of the series is to engage both with a challenging corpus of Romantic writings and with the changing field of criticism they have helped to shape. As with other literary series published by Cambridge University Press, this one will represent the work of both younger and more established scholars on either side of the Atlantic and elsewhere.

See the end of the book for a complete list of published titles.

Cambridge University Press
978-1-107-18387-2 — Romanticism and Theatrical Experience
Jonathan Mulrooney
Frontmatter
More Information

ROMANTICISM AND
THEATRICAL EXPERIENCE

Kean, Hazlitt, and Keats in the Age of Theatrical News

JONATHAN MULROONEY

College of the Holy Cross, Worcester Mass.

CAMBRIDGE
UNIVERSITY PRESS

Cambridge University Press
978-1-107-18387-2 — Romanticism and Theatrical Experience
Jonathan Mulrooney
Frontmatter
More Information

CAMBRIDGE
UNIVERSITY PRESS

University Printing House, Cambridge CB2 8BS, United Kingdom
One Liberty Plaza, 20th Floor, New York, NY 10006, USA
477 Williamstown Road, Port Melbourne, VIC 3207, Australia
314–321, 3rd Floor, Plot 3, Splendor Forum, Jasola District Centre,
New Delhi – 110025, India
79 Anson Road, #06–04/06, Singapore 079906

Cambridge University Press is part of the University of Cambridge.

It furthers the University's mission by disseminating knowledge in the pursuit of education, learning, and research at the highest international levels of excellence.

www.cambridge.org
Information on this title: www.cambridge.org/9781107183872
DOI: 10.1017/9781316874905

© Jonathan Mulrooney 2018

This publication is in copyright. Subject to statutory exception and to the provisions of relevant collective licensing agreements, no reproduction of any part may take place without the written permission of Cambridge University Press.

First published 2018

Printed in the United Kingdom by TJ International Ltd. Padstow Cornwall

A catalogue record for this publication is available from the British Library.

ISBN 978-1-107-18387-2 Hardback

Cambridge University Press has no responsibility for the persistence or accuracy of URLs for external or third-party internet websites referred to in this publication and does not guarantee that any content on such websites is, or will remain, accurate or appropriate.

Cambridge University Press
978-1-107-18387-2 — Romanticism and Theatrical Experience
Jonathan Mulrooney
Frontmatter
More Information

For Grace and Anna

Cambridge University Press
978-1-107-18387-2 — Romanticism and Theatrical Experience
Jonathan Mulrooney
Frontmatter
More Information

Contents

List of Figures	page viii
Acknowledgments	ix
Introduction	I
PART I THE MAKING OF BRITISH THEATER AUDIENCES	21
1 Theater and the Daily News	23
2 Britain's Theatrical Press, 1800–1830	57
PART II THEATER AND LATE ROMANTICISM	107
3 Edmund Kean's Controversy	109
4 Hazlitt's Romantic Occasionalism	152
5 Keats, Kean, and the Poetics of Interruption	191
Bibliography	236
Index	254

Figures

- | | | |
|----|--|--------|
| 1. | John Orlando Parry, The Posterman (1835); by permission of the Dunhill Archive. | page 4 |
| 2. | Front page of The Times (Monday, September 4, 1809); by permission of the British Library. | 33 |
| 3. | George Cruikshank, “Keen-ish Sport in Cox’s Court!!: or Symptoms of Crim.Con. in Drury Lane” (Fairburn, 1824); by permission of Folger Shakespeare Library. | 126 |
| 4. | “The Court of King’s Bench turn’d into a Cock pit, or 800 Symptoms of Kean Sport” (Marks, 1825); by permission of Folger Shakespeare Library. | 126 |
| 5. | “Mr. Kean as Richard The IIIrd, Act 5th, Scene 4th” (Marks, early c19); by permission of Folger Shakespeare Library. | 127 |
| 6. | R. Cruikshank, “The Hostile Press; and the consequences of Crim.Con or Shakespeare in danger” (Fairburn, 1825); by permission of Folger Shakespeare Library. | 129 |
- Jacket Illustration: Detail of John Orlando Parry, The Posterman (1835); by permission of the Dunhill Archive/Getty Images.

Acknowledgments

This book emerged from a desire to bring together two seemingly disparate early interests – performed theater and Romantic poems. It has been overlong in the making, with an extended hiatus in the middle in favor of other commitments, and consequently I have the pleasure of acknowledging those who offered much help and many favors along the way. Part of Chapter 1 was published in Nineteenth-Century Contexts, and part of Chapter 5 appeared previously in Studies in Romanticism (published by the Trustees of Boston University). I thank the journal editors for permission to reprint these materials. A passage from Chapter 4 appeared in different form in an essay in The Fountain Light: Studies in Romanticism and Religion, ed. J. Robert Barth (2002).

James Chandler believed in the project before I did and along with Linda Bree at Cambridge University Press exhibited long-standing patience and unstinting support even when I seemed to have lost the way. Kevin Gilmartin provided a first reading for the Press that was a model of rigor and collegiality, as well as a thorough reading of the revised manuscript. I am grateful as well for Gregory Dart's cogent and hugely helpful reader's report. Both readers' willingness to praise what was working and alert me to places I had gone amiss has greatly strengthened the final version. Alan Bewell, Miranda Burgess, Tom Crochunis, Mary Favret, Sonia Hofkosh, Jerrold Hogle, Jon Klancher, Paige Reynolds, Eliza Richards, Christopher Ricks, Charles Rzepka, David Wagenknecht, and James Winn read all or portions of the manuscript and offered vital corrections, suggestions, and enthusiasm.

Among the great joys of being a Romanticist is the company it enables one to keep. So many people have, whether they know it or not, helped me become a better scholar, teacher, and colleague. Indeed when I began compiling a list of those to thank personally, it quickly grew so long that the fear of omitting someone became debilitating. Instead, then, I will mention just a few of that company, beyond those I have already named, and further say that if you are reading this and can imagine yourself in any way as part of the circles in which I have moved, know that I am grateful for your presence and for the time we have spent together. Warm thanks, first, go to Jonathan Sachs and Andrew Stauffer, indispensable fellow travelers who have challenged me and celebrated with me in all the important moments. Jeff Cox, Greg Kucich, and Nicholas Roe have showed me in true Cockney fashion how sociability and intellectual work go hand in hand. I have grown up as a Romanticist alongside Miranda Burgess, Scott Hess, Jennifer Jones, Tilar Mazzeo, Brian McGrath, Emily Rohrbach, Emily Sun, and so many more whose intellectual gifts and human decency continually astound me. Matt Borushko, Carmen Faye Mathes, Anahid Nersessian, Michele Speitz, and others like them give me hope for the field, and I am lucky to call them friends. And the theater mafia (you know who you are, Terry Robinson et al.) will always remain a special cohort. I wish finally to give special mention to the ever-missed Jane Moody, without whose work on Romantic-period theater (and without whose personal encouragement) this book simply would never have existed.

Audiences at many lectures and presentations helped shaped the work, especially members of the North American Society for the Study of Romanticism (NASSR), the Keats-Shelley Association of America, and the Keats Foundation Hampstead Conference, whose regular activities are highlights on my calendar. The Boston Area Romanticist Colloquium (BARC), which a few of us formed in the wake of the NASSR 2013 conference, has provided a new venue for scholarly sociability. Research for the project was supported by funding from the National Endowment for the Humanities, the Keats-Shelley Association of America, and the College of the Holy Cross, and was conducted principally at the Harvard Theatre Collection and the Houghton Library, as well as on shorter voyages into the British Library. I thank the staffs at those archives for their acumen at finding often obscure and forgotten materials.

I am keenly aware of how lucky I am to work at the College of the Holy Cross, an institution willing to give its faculty time to develop as intellectuals in ways that do not always yield immediate professional benefits. Among the many English Department colleagues who have modeled for me the ideal of the teacher-scholar (not to mention teacher-scholar-parent), I am particularly pleased to share a hall with Debra Gattelman, Shawn Maurer, and Paige Reynolds. Maurice Gérard, James Kee, and Rich Matlak have been fine mentors over the years, and Melissa Schoenberger's arrival has reinvigorated the teaching of poetry at Holy Cross. Thanks also to Deans Timothy Austin and Margaret Freije, who supported me during my six years as Department

Acknowledgments

xi

Chair trying to maintain an active scholarly life. It goes without saying how much my students continue to challenge and inspire me; I am thankful for their constant reminder of why I chose this profession. On the other side, my own teachers have at every stage showed me the best aspects of the intellectual life. Let Alan Bewell, John Howard S.J., Robin Jackson, Jon Klancher, John L. Mahoney, Mark O'Connor, John Paul Riquelme, Christopher Ricks, Charles Rzepka, Gabriele Schwab, Susan Stewart, and James Winn stand in for so many others who have improved my thinking and writing.

My parents, sisters, and extended family (both Mulrooneys and Hands) have given encouragement and good humor since the beginning and will no doubt be surprised when “the book” actually appears as a material object in the world. Most of all, I am grateful beyond telling for the dear friends within and outside academia who have helped and sustained me over the years. Deepest thanks to David and Karen Anderson, Miranda Burgess, Andrew Hartley, Heath Hightower, Dianne and Maarten Kraaijvanger, Paul and Rachel LaChance, Todd McGowan, Kirk Melnikoff, María José Sánchez Montes, Hilary Neroni, Paul Poth, David Puente, Paige Reynolds, Valerie Rohy, Prashant Watchmaker, Andrew Watson, Lisa White, and Lara Vetter.

Alicemarie Hand has provided sustaining love, support, and daily companionship. I can only offer that my ability to complete the book is just one small sign of how much she has given me. The first work on this project took place before my daughters Grace and Anna were born, and the book has grown in fits and starts even as they have flourished. Time was often stolen from it on their behalf, and sometimes the reverse was necessarily true. Both will be disappointed that there are no dragons or wizards to be found here, but perhaps one day they will read the book and find no less compelling figures to suit their imaginations. The girls are near to me as I write these words (one of them even asleep on the couch where I sit). As the book makes its way into the world, it carries the blessing that their presence, and their mother's, has been and will always remain.

Cambridge University Press
978-1-107-18387-2 — Romanticism and Theatrical Experience
Jonathan Mulrooney
Frontmatter
More Information
