

Contents

Acknowledgments	page vii
1 Introduction: “One political being called a people . . .”	I
1.1 One People, Two Bodies	3
1.2 Compromise and the Challenge of Realism	10
1.3 E Pluribus Unum	17
2 The Uncompromising Puritans: “If the whole conclave of Hell can so compromise . . .”	27
2.1 “Puritanism was in the eye of the beholder”	32
2.2 “. . . as the entrails of a creature cut down the back”	40
2.3 “. . . they look backward as well as forward”	49
2.4 “They don’t weigh the intellectual furniture . . .”	56
2.5 “. . . until a better light will be available to guide them”	62
3 The Uncompromising Patriots: “Friends, brethren, enemies will prove . . .”	66
3.1 “We are breaking to pieces in our churches”	70
3.2 In the Wake of the Awakening	78
3.3 “How then do we New Englanders derive our laws?”	85
3.4 The King “unkings himself”	96
4 The Compromising Confederates: “. . . mounting a body of Mermaids on Alligators”	105
4.1 “. . . a rope of sand”	110
4.2 “We are the State”	120
4.3 “. . . mutual sacrifices should be made to effect a compromise . . .”	132
5 The Constitution: “. . . that greatest of all compromises”	139
5.1 “The states must see the rod . . .”	144

vi	Contents
5.2 “... To smoke the calumet of Union and love”	151
5.3 “The House on fire must be extinguished”	158
5.4 “It will wait upon the ladies at their toilet ...”	165
6 “This Is Essentially a People’s Contest”: “Shall We Compromise?”	174
6.1 “... fresh from the loins of the people ...”	181
6.2 “Party spirit ... only ask to lick the sores of the body politic”	192
6.3 “The day of compromise has passed”	205
7 Conclusions: Resuscitating the People’s Two Bodies	217
7.1 Parties without Partisanship?	224
7.2 Purged Individualism and Facebook	233
7.3 “We, the People ...”	242
Index	249