

CIVIC POWER

What will it take to restore American democracy and rescue it from this moment of crisis? Civic Power argues that the current threat to U.S. democracy is rooted not just in the outcome of the 2016 election, but in deeper, systemic forms of inequality that concentrate economic and political power in the hands of the few at the expense of the many. Drawing on historical and social science research and case studies of contemporary democratic innovations across the country, Civic Power calls for a broader approach to democracy reform focused on meaningfully redistributing power to citizens. It advocates for both reviving grassroots civil society and novel approaches to governance, policymaking, civic technology, and institutional design – aimed at dismantling structural disparities to build a more inclusive, empowered, bottom-up democracy where communities and people have greater voice, power, and agency.

K. Sabeel Rahman is the President of Demos, a think-and-do tank committed to building a more inclusive and equitable democracy and economy. He is also Associate Professor of Law at Brooklyn Law School, where he teaches constitutional law and administrative law. He is a leading scholar of democracy, law, and inequality, and is the author of Democracy against Domination (2017), which won the American Political Science Association's Dahl Award.

Hollie Russon Gilman is Lecturer at Columbia University and holds research fellowships at New America and Georgetown's Beeck Center. Her work focuses on the intersection of civic engagement, technology, and governance. She is the author of Democracy Reinvented: Participatory Budgeting and Civic Innovation in America (2016). She served in the Obama Administration in the White House Office of Science and Technology Policy.

Cambridge University Press
978-1-108-42211-6 — Civic Power
K.Sabeel Rahman , Hollie Russon Gilman
Frontmatter
More Information

---

Civic Power

REBUILDING AMERICAN DEMOCRACY IN AN ERA OF CRISIS

K. SABEEL RAHMAN

Brooklyn Law School

HOLLIE RUSSON GILMAN

Columbia University, New York

CAMBRIDGE
UNIVERSITY PRESS

Cambridge University Press
978-1-108-42211-6 — Civic Power
K.Sabeel Rahman, Hollie Russon Gilman
Frontmatter
More Information

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS

University Printing House, Cambridge CB2 8BS, United Kingdom

One Liberty Plaza, 20th Floor, New York, NY 10006, USA

477 Williamstown Road, Port Melbourne, VIC 3207, Australia

314-321, 3rd Floor, Plot 3, Splendor Forum, Jasola District Centre,
New Delhi – 110025, India

79 Anson Road, #06-04/06, Singapore 079906

Cambridge University Press is part of the University of Cambridge.

It furthers the University's mission by disseminating knowledge in the pursuit of education, learning, and research at the highest international levels of excellence.

www.cambridge.org

Information on this title: www.cambridge.org/9781108422116

DOI: 10.1017/9781108380744

© K. Sabeel Rahman and Hollie Russon Gilman 2019

This publication is in copyright. Subject to statutory exception and to the provisions of relevant collective licensing agreements, no reproduction of any part may take place without the written permission of Cambridge University Press.

First published 2019

Printed and bound in Great Britain by Clays Ltd, Elcograf S.p.A.

A catalogue record for this publication is available from the British Library.

ISBN 978-1-108-42211-6 Hardback

ISBN 978-1-108-43184-2 Paperback

Cambridge University Press has no responsibility for the persistence or accuracy of URLs for external or third-party internet websites referred to in this publication and does not guarantee that any content on such websites is, or will remain, accurate or appropriate.

Contents

Preface	page vii
1 Democracy in Crisis	1
Inequality, Exclusion, and the Chronic Crisis of Democracy	3
The Failure of Conventional Democracy Reform	13
Reclaiming Democracy’s Radicalism	22
Civic Power	27
A Road Map for Reconstructing Our Democracy	37
Of, For, and By the People	43
PART I CIVIC POWER THROUGH ORGANIZING	45
2 Democracy and Inequality as a Function of the Balance of Power	47
Organizations, Political Power, and Organizing	49
The Democratizing Force of Progressive Organizational Power	53
Inequality as a Problem of Organizational Power	60
Organizing Exclusionary Populism	68
Conclusion	79
3 Organizing for Power	81
The Promise and Peril of “Thin” Organizing	82
Toward Inclusive, Empowered Civic Capacity	90
Conclusion	107
PART II CIVIC POWER THROUGH GOVERNANCE	111
4 From Governance to Power – Rethinking Democracy Reform	113
Administrative Procedure and the Limits of Good Governance	116
The Limits of “Innovating Government”	120

	The Rise – and Limits – of the “Civic Tech” Movement	124
	Governance Reform as Power Shifting: An Alternative Tradition	134
	From Citizen as Consumer to Citizen as Agent	140
5	Bureaucratizing Participation	142
	Bureaucratizing Engagement: The Case of the CFPB	143
	Cultivating Internal Support for Participatory Governance	150
	Democratizing Government from Within	163
6	Power-Oriented Policy Design	169
	Participatory Policymaking: The Case of Participatory Budgeting	172
	Downstream Participation: Monitoring and Enforcement	183
	Institutionalized Representation	194
	Conclusion: Power, Participation, and Policy Design	200
	PART III CONCLUSION	203
7	Democracy’s Future	205
	Democratic Resistance and Reconstruction	205
	Recommendations: Building Civic Power	212
	Bibliography	224
	Index	261

Preface

In the fall of 2013, we had the good fortune of working with a group of remarkable scholars and organizers concerned about the state of American democracy. The Gettysburg Project, as we came to call it (in reference to Abraham Lincoln’s defense of democracy in his Gettysburg Address), brought together leading organizers, democracy reformers, foundations, and academics to think deeply about how the crisis of American democracy could be addressed in the long term. Since then, we have continued working with an ever-growing network of inspiring and incredible leaders, across community organizations, policymakers, and foundations. A few years later, we convened a similar cross sector gathering of leaders at Open Society Foundations to discuss the possibilities for building more inclusive democracy in the United States of America, spurred by debates over the United Nations Sustainable Development Goals. Most recently, in the spring of 2017, we gathered a group of organizers, movement leaders, thinkers, and policymakers at New America, a think tank based in Washington, DC, to revisit this question of democratic renewal in the aftermath of the 2016 election.

These conversations connected us to a wide world of amazing leaders in democracy reform. They also underscored the importance of building communities of practice where such conversations can be conducted at a deep level – and where silos between research and practice, between organizing and policymaking, can be broken down to build genuine relationships and dialogue. While committed to the same core values, these different groups had rarely engaged with one another in a deep and generative way. Academics studying democracy often do not do so in dialogue with on-the-ground movement organizers. Advocacy groups, while adept at challenging governments, are not often engaged in collaborative and honest dialogues with policymakers about how to design different institutions and governance regimes. This project emerged out of a desire to build on the lessons learned from those discussions and to spur further dialogue.

The 2016 election intensified this motivation. For many Americans, the election of Donald Trump seemed implausible, a refutation of a sense of democratic progress toward ever-greater inclusion. Yet while we shared acute concerns about the future of American democracy, we were also deeply aware that many of today's concerns, though novel in some ways, are rooted in familiar and long-running challenges: inequality, racial and gender subordination, globalization, and the like. Indeed, while the election has spurred a powerful partisan battle over control of policy in Washington, there is a notable gap between this partisan fight and efforts at more structural reforms to address threats to democracy that have often arisen from – and been fueled by – policy decisions made by both major parties. At the same time, the urgency of these threats to democracy seemed at odds with some other democracy reform conversations based in the civic technology movement and emerging from Silicon Valley. The techno-utopian vision of a democracy optimized by apps and online tools appeared woefully limited in the face of such deep and chronic concerns as well as the critique of the distorting capacities of such technology that other scholars and activists have voiced since the election.

Our discussion in this book openly centers on the United States; this is not a book about the global crisis of liberal democracy. But that national focus enables us to highlight what we think are very real areas of innovation and creativity as well as potentially transformative work to enhance the power of communities from the bottom up and thereby radically transform our institutions of governance to be more inclusive, responsive, and democratic.

We could not have produced this volume without the support, guidance, and thoughtfulness of many wonderful colleagues, mentors, and collaborators. Thanks are owed particularly to Xavier de Souza Briggs, Anna Burger, Archon Fung, Marshall Ganz, Hahrie Han, and the participants in the Gettysburg Project convenings from 2013 to 2016. The Harvard Kennedy School's Roy and Lila Ash Center for Democratic Governance and Innovation helped incubate the earliest stages of this book as part of its support for the Gettysburg Project (and for each of us!) in those early years. Thanks are also due to the many academics, researchers, and practitioners whose work has inspired us and who have offered us generous feedback and support, including Susan Crawford, Michael Dawson, Claudine Gay, Jacob Hacker, Sarah Holloway, Merit Janow, David Karpf, Taeku Lee, Matt Leighninger, Zach Markovits, Tina Nabatchi, Beth Simone Noveck, Tiago C. Peixoto, Paul Pierson, Andrew Rasiej, Donata Secondo, Sonal Shah, Micah Sifry, Dennis Thompson,

Edward T. Walker, Ari Wallach, Brian Wampler, Vanessa Williamson, and Nicole Wong. We are grateful to the many practitioner collaborators who shared their work and their insights with us and granted us permission to highlight them in the book as case studies, including Whitney Kimball Coe, Dee Davis, and the Center for Rural Strategies; Jess Kutch, Michelle Miller, and Coworker.org; Lydia Bean and Faith in Texas; Regina Schwartz and the Mayor's Public Engagement Unit in New York City; Nigel Jacob and the Mayor's Office of New Urban Mechanics in Boston; Josh Lerner and the Participatory Budgeting Project; and Nikki Bas, Lauren Jacobs, and the Partnership for Working Families. We also thank the participants from the April 2017 convening at New America.

The development of this book has been supported by a number of colleagues and collaborators. We are grateful to the Political Reform Program team at New America, including especially Rachel Black, Lee Drutman, Heather Hurlburt, Chayenne Polimedio, Mark Schmitt, Anne-Marie Slaughter, Elena Souris, and others. We are also grateful for the support of the Beeck Center at Georgetown University, the School of International and Public Affairs at Columbia University, and the faculty and administration of Brooklyn Law School. As the manuscript was being finalized, we were also lucky to engage with our new colleagues at Demos, whose enthusiasm and support have been enormously helpful as well. We thank the Democracy Fund, the Ford Foundation, Knight Foundation, and Open Society Foundations for supporting various convenings and research that helped develop the ideas in this book.

Jannon Stein has been a phenomenal colleague and editor throughout the manuscript. Sabrina Detlef provided excellent copy-editing support. John Berger and Cambridge University Press were excellent publishers, and their enthusiasm and flexibility made this book possible. Thank you as well to our excellent research assistants for their hard work and dedication, including: Aliya Bhatia, Ian Eppler, Harleen Gambhir, Emma Gould, Audrey Litvak, Lawrence McDonald, Pablo Andres Mandiola, Carolyn Morway, Michael Myones, Rebecca Rosen, Gemma Torras Vives, and Jonathan Yang.

Finally, Hollie would like to thank Daniel Benaim for being the best life partner and father to the newest family member, Charlotte Mia Benaim. She's our hope for the future and a reminder of why this work matters to us. She also thanks her parents Gail Russon and Stephen Gilman for their boundless love and spirit of generosity and kindness. Sabeel would like to thank Noorain Khan for her boundless enthusiasm and support in this and all things, and his family Kazi A. Rahman, Shegufta Rahman, Wasima Rahman, Marc Garrett, and Sadia Rahman for all their love and support.

Portions of this manuscript draw on research that each of us previously published, particularly on our previous articles and papers: K. Sabeel Rahman, “Policymaking as Power-Building,” Southern California Interdisciplinary Law Journal 27 (2018): 315–77; K. Sabeel Rahman, “(Re)Constructing Democracy in Crisis,” UCLA Law Review 65 (2018): 1552–72; K. Sabeel Rahman, “From Civic Tech to Civic Capacity: The Case of Citizen Audits,” Political Science and Politics 50 (2017): 751–57; Hollie Russon Gilman and Jessica Gover, The Architecture of Innovation: Institutionalizing Innovation in Federal Policymaking (Washington, DC: Beeck Center at Georgetown University, 2016); Hollie Russon Gilman, “Government as Government, Not Business,” Stanford Social Innovation Review, October 5, 2017, https://ssir.org/articles/entry/government\_as\_government\_not\_business; and Hollie Russon Gilman and K. Sabeel Rahman, Building Civic Capacity in an Era of Democratic Crisis (Washington, DC: New America, September 2017). We thank the respective editors and journals for their support for these earlier works and their permission to reproduce and repurpose them in this larger project.