

Cambridge University Press
978-1-108-47648-5 — Christian Pacifism for an Environmental Age
Mark Douglas
Frontmatter
More Information

Christian Pacifism for an Environmental Age

In this volume, Mark Douglas offers a new vision of the history of Christian pacifism within the context of a warming world. He narrates this story in a way that recognizes the complexities of the tradition and aligns it with a coherent theological vision, one that shapes the tradition to encompass the new causes and types of wars fought during the Anthropocene. Along the way, Douglas draws from research in historical climatology to recover the overlooked role that climate changes have always played in shaping not only the Christian pacifist tradition but also the movement of traditions through western history. Scholars across a range of disciplines – peace studies, Christian theology and history, environmentalism, and environmental conflict studies – will benefit from this model of critical and charitable engagement with the complex history of Christian pacifism, the resources of which will be important for addressing wars in a warming world.

Mark Douglas is Professor of Christian Ethics at Columbia Theological Seminary. He is the author of Confessing Christ in the 21st Century and Believing Aloud: Reflections on Being Religious in the Public Square.

Cambridge University Press
978-1-108-47648-5 — Christian Pacifism for an Environmental Age
Mark Douglas
Frontmatter
More Information

Cambridge University Press
978-1-108-47648-5 — Christian Pacifism for an Environmental Age
Mark Douglas
Frontmatter
More Information

Christian Pacifism for an Environmental Age

MARK DOUGLAS
Columbia Theological Seminary

Cambridge University Press
 978-1-108-47648-5 — Christian Pacifism for an Environmental Age
 Mark Douglas
 Frontmatter
More Information

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS

University Printing House, Cambridge CB2 8BS, United Kingdom
 One Liberty Plaza, 20th Floor, New York, NY 10006, USA
 477 Williamstown Road, Port Melbourne, VIC 3207, Australia
 314-321, 3rd Floor, Plot 3, Splendor Forum, Jasola District Centre,
 New Delhi – 110025, India
 79 Anson Road, #06-04/06, Singapore 079906

Cambridge University Press is part of the University of Cambridge.
 It furthers the University's mission by disseminating knowledge in the pursuit of education, learning, and research at the highest international levels of excellence.

www.cambridge.org
 Information on this title: www.cambridge.org/9781108476485
 DOI: 10.1017/9781108568548

© Cambridge University Press 2019

This publication is in copyright. Subject to statutory exception and to the provisions of relevant collective licensing agreements, no reproduction of any part may take place without the written permission of Cambridge University Press.

First published 2019

Printed and bound in Great Britain by Clays Ltd, Elcograf S.p.A.
A catalogue record for this publication is available from the British Library.

Library of Congress Cataloging-in-Publication Data

NAMES: Douglas, Mark, author.
 TITLE: Christian pacifism for an environmental age / Mark Douglas.
 DESCRIPTION: New York : Cambridge University Press, 2019. | Includes bibliographical references and index.
 IDENTIFIERS: LCCN 2018045100 | ISBN 9781108476485
 SUBJECTS: LCSH: Pacifism – Religious aspects – Christianity – History of doctrines. |
 Nonviolence – Religious aspects – Christianity – History of doctrines.
 CLASSIFICATION: LCC BT736.4 .D595 2019 | DDC 261.8/7309–dc23
 LC record available at <https://lcn.loc.gov/2018045100>

ISBN 978-1-108-47648-5 Hardback

Cambridge University Press has no responsibility for the persistence or accuracy of URLs for external or third-party internet websites referred to in this publication and does not guarantee that any content on such websites is, or will remain, accurate or appropriate.

Contents

| | |
|---|----------------|
| Acknowledgments | page vi |
| Introduction: Climate, Conflict, and the Conventional Narrative of Christian Pacifism | I |
| PART I THE CHURCH AND NONVIOLENCE BEFORE CONSTANTINE | |
| 1 The Silences of the Second Century | 25 |
| 2 Mixed Motives and Conflicts Over Conflicts in the Second and Third Centuries | 42 |
| 3 Church, State, and a “Constantinian Fall” | 65 |
| PART II THE CHURCH AND NONVIOLENCE AFTER CONSTANTINE | |
| 4 Christian Pacifism and Constantine | 85 |
| 5 Pacifist Interpretations of 1500 Years of Faith, Community, and Nonviolence | 112 |
| 6 Pacifisms Since 1865 | 145 |
| PART III RE-NARRATING THE HISTORY OF THE CHURCH AND NONVIOLENCE | |
| 7 Time and Tradition in a Theological Framework | 187 |
| 8 Re-narrating the Christian Pacifist Tradition | 212 |
| Afterword | 247 |
| Bibliography | 251 |
| Index | 262 |

Acknowledgments

There is no “I” in “book”. As much as spending time hunched over a computer or digging through library stacks are solitary enterprises, good books come about through the work of others: writers who came before us, scholars around the world who now share their wisdom with us, colleagues who gather round us, draft-readers who offer suggestions to us, and friends and family who support us. This brief acknowledgments section notes only some of the more prominent among those who have made this book possible; as such, it functions, synecdochally, as recognition for many. Those who go unmentioned below do so not because they don’t warrant my gratitude but because my faulty memory hasn’t brought them to mind as I write.

As the afterword notes, this is not the book I had initially intended to write. The changes that the manuscript underwent on the way from moving in one direction to becoming this very different book can be either partially blamed on or significantly credited to a range of conversation partners who not only enriched it but continue to enrich me. Among these I mention Ellen Ott-Marshall, Ted Smith, and Ian McFarland at Emory University, Kim Cobb at Georgia Tech, Kipton Jensen at Morehouse College, Kevin O’Brien at Pacific Lutheran University, and Ernst Conradie at the University of the Western Cape in South Africa. Thanks to all of them.

This book has benefitted from many people who read particular chapters of it in draft form and offered feedback that strengthened it and me. Among them are my colleagues at Columbia Theological Seminary (CTS), especially those who read a version of Chapter 7

Acknowledgments

vii

one year and a draft of Chapter 8 a couple years later as part of our monthly “Dean’s Lunch” gatherings. In that regard, special thanks to my colleague in ethics at CTS, Dr. Marcia Riggs, whose own work on religious ethical mediation is proving helpful to any number of people who study and train in the practices of conflict transformation. Beyond CTS, I shared Chapter 8 with a number of colleagues in Emory University’s Graduate Division of Religion, including Liz Bounds and Bryan Ellrod, as well as the aforementioned Ted Smith and Ellen Ott-Marshall and the soon-to-be mentioned Brian Powers. The Reformed Theology Reading Group (James Calvin Davis, Roger Gench, Elizabeth Hinson-Hasty, and Doug Ottati) suffered through rough drafts of Chapters 2 and 5 in order to reduce the suffering of those who now read this book. And comments from the reviewers who read the manuscript for Cambridge University Press were especially helpful in streamlining and strengthening the Introduction and Chapter 6. Thanks to all of them.

Beyond reading and offering feedback, several people labored with me in the book’s production. Beatrice Rehl and Eilidh Burrett at Cambridge Press have been wonderful to work with: gracious and thoughtful in the ways of the best editors. Colleagues on the board of Georgia Interfaith Power and Light were constant sources of encouragement. My family – especially my wife, Rev. Lindsay Armstrong, our daughter, Logan Armstrong Douglas, as well as my in-laws, Jim and Bev Armstrong – put up with my crabby periods and celebrated my small victories. Thanks to all of them.

A generous grant from the Nohria Family Charitable Fund allowed me to hire a former student and current colleague, Dr. Brian Powers, to do editorial work on the manuscript as well as compile the bibliography and put together the index. Thanks to the Fund and Dr. Virinder Nohria for their willingness to fund my “War in a Warming World” project and to Brian for his careful and gracious editorial work. Though it is perhaps a bit odd to advertise a book from one press in the pages in another, I would nevertheless encourage readers to buy and read Brian’s book, Full Darkness: Original Sin, Moral Injury, and Wartime Violence (Eerdman’s Press, 2019). It is totally worth it.

Between the time that the first draft of this book was completed and the time of its publication, the world lost a great man: Rev. Dr. David Bartlett. In his career(s) as a pastor and scholar, David exemplified collegiality in its most profound and magically light-hearted ways. To say that he was a friend to many only begins to capture the way David created and built friendships wherever he went. Along with many students and colleagues at CTS, I was fortunate that he was willing to give up his first retirement from Yale Divinity School and join the faculty at CTS – and that after he retired (again, this time from CTS, and then, yet again, from Trinity Presbyterian Church of Atlanta), the two of us were able to continue to work together on a range of projects and share many and wide-ranging conversations, sometimes with our spouses and/or kids and sometimes just the two of us. In our time together, David was, among other things, a wise mentor, thoughtful colleague, careful editor, willing co-conspirator, easy travel-partner, engaging co-preacher, gracious host, and good friend. I expect his voice will be easy to pick out among all those that compose the rest of the heavenly choir when next we meet. Although his own academic work was in the areas of New Testament and homiletics, David nevertheless manifested in his life and work many of the best practices of peacemaking and peacebuilding that will be so necessary for life in the Anthropocene. I dedicate this book to him.