

Contents

List of Figures	page ix
Acknowledgments	xi
Dedication and Trigger Warning	xv
Introduction: “To Tell the Truth”: African American Activism in the British Isles 1835–1895	i
1 “It Is Time for the Slaves to Speak”: Moses Roper, White Networks, and “Lying Inventions” 1835–1855	48
2 “All the Bloody Paraphernalia of Slavery”: Frederick Douglass’ Performative Strategies on the Victorian Stage	81
3 “[They Have] Not Ceased to Hold My Hand Since”: Frederick Douglass, Print Culture, and Abolitionist Networks	123
4 To “Frighten the Hyena Out of His Ferocity”: Black Activism in Britain 1850–1860	163
5 “I Would Much Rather Starve in England, a Free Woman, Than Be a Slave”: Black Women and Adaptive Resistance 1850–1865	197
6 “Have No Fellowship I Pray You, with These Merciless Menstealers”: Black Activism, the Confederacy, and Scientific Racism during the Civil War 1861–1865	219
7 “My Name Is Not Tom”: Josiah Henson, Uncle Tom’s Cabin , and Adaptive Resistance after the Civil War 1876–1877	255
8 “The Black People’s Side of the Story”: Ida B. Wells and the Anti-lynching Crusade in Britain 1893–1894	292

viii	Contents
	Conclusion: “To Tell the Story of the Slave”: The Legacy of African American Transatlantic Resistance	318
	Bibliography	331
	Index	365