LEARNING LAW

In a diverse and ever-changing world, the teaching of law must prepare students for the unique context of practising law in the twenty-first century. Learning Law is an indispensable guide for students beginning their law studies. It provides the foundational knowledge and skills required for the study and practice of law, and also instils in students a passion and excitement for the law.

Written by leading academics who have practised law in a variety of settings, this text challenges students' traditional notions of the law and encourages them to think critically. This book is supported by tools for self-assessment and self-reflection: review questions to revise complex concepts; 'Alternative Voices' breakout boxes, which provide a different perspective on each topic; and 'Living Law' case studies, which illustrate how law qualifications can be applied in various settings, from traditional law firms to government and academia.

Learning Law is written in an engaging and accessible style designed to demystify the law. This text is an essential and comprehensive resource that can be carried as a practical reference throughout a student's law studies.

Anthony Marinac is Lecturer in the School of Business and Law at CQUniversity.

Brian Simpson is Professor in the School of Law at the University of New England.

Caroline Hart is Senior Lecturer in the School of Law and Justice at the University of Southern Queensland.

Rhianna Chisholm is Associate Lecturer in the Department of Law at Curtin University.

Jennifer Nielsen is Associate Professor in the School of Law and Justice at Southern Cross University.

Michael Brogan is Senior Lecturer in the School of Law at Western Sydney University.

AUTHORS

Anthony Marinac is a Lecturer in the School of Business and Law at Central Queensland University, Rockhampton. He teaches online, reaching students all around Australia and the region. He was called to the bar in Queensland in 2015, and maintains a part-time practice as a barrister and mediator, primarily in criminal and family law. He has previously worked as Counsel Assisting in Queensland's Office of the State Coroner, was a commissioned legal officer in the Royal Australian Air Force, and was Director of Research and a Senate Committee Secretary in the Department of the Senate, Parliament House Canberra.

Brian Simpson is a Professor in the School of Law at the University of New England. He has taught at various universities in Australia and England and currently teaches Introduction to Legal Systems and Methods to commencing students and Family Law as a later year elective. His research is inter-disciplinary and focuses on children's rights, law and new technologies, and social justice. He also has a long-standing interest in how access to law can transform people's lives and has been involved in many community legal centres and welfare rights organisations over his legal career.

Caroline Hart is a Senior Lecturer in the School of Law and Justice at the University of Southern Queensland. She has taught the core foundational law course, Australian Legal System, for over ten years. Prior to joining the University of Southern Queensland, Caroline provided legal, legislation and policy advice to state governments for over 15 years, including working on a number of commissions of inquiry. Caroline has provided consultancy training services to state government, and consultancy legal services to private law firms. Caroline has a PhD in Sustainable Regional/Rural Legal Practice, and a Master of Law in government use of information technology. She is a member of the Queensland Law Society, the Downs and Southern Western District Law Society, the Australian Centre for Sustainable Business and Development Centre, the Institute of Resilient Regions, and is a director on the National Rural Law and Justice Alliance.

Rhianna Chisholm is an Associate Lecturer at Curtin Law School at Curtin University. Rhianna has held this position since 2014 and has focused on developing expertise in teaching introductory law units to first-year law students. Rhianna has a Bachelor of Laws from Murdoch University and a Master of Laws from the University of Western Australia. She is currently completing her PhD at the University of Western Australia on the effectiveness of court-based diversion in Western Australia. Her research interests include mental health law and capacity, human rights, international law and criminal justice.

Jennifer Nielsen is Associate Professor in the School of Law and Justice at Southern Cross University. She is an experienced legal scholar with expertise in discrimination and employment law, critical race and critical whiteness theory, and social justice in rural, regional and remote communities. She has taught across the undergraduate law curriculum, and supervises honours and postgraduate candidatures. Jennifer is also active in community organisations in the Northern Rivers region in New South Wales, and is the current Chairperson of the Committee of Management, Northern Rivers Community Legal Centre. Before joining Southern Cross in 1994, she practised as a solicitor in New South Wales and Victoria, and worked in academic positions with both the Monash Orientation Scheme for Aborigines and the Faculty of Law at Monash University.

Michael Brogan is Senior Lecturer and Director of Engagement in the School of Law at Western Sydney University. He has held numerous administrative positions within the university and has a long connection with community centres, community organisations and public health campaigns.

Extension questions

Q1: Use your research skills to locate the United Nations Treaty Database.
 The treaty database can be found at: <https://treaties.un.org/>

Q2: What famous trials after World War II gave the key impetus to the development and recognition of universal crimes?
 The Nuremberg Trials, in which the key German Nazis were tried, are generally acknowledged to have been the key trials, along with the Tokyo Trials, which served the same function in relation to war crimes alleged to have been committed by Imperialist Japanese.

Review questions

Q1: What two functions of the Constitution were examined in this chapter?
 The Constitution's role in limiting the legislative power of the Commonwealth and State Parliaments; and the Constitution's role in establishing the primacy of Commonwealth law if the states make a law inconsistent with the Commonwealth.

Q2: What is the difference between 'legislation' and 'statute'?
 There is no difference; both words have the same meaning.

Q3: If there is a conflict between the common law and statute law, which will take precedence?

REVIEW QUESTIONS

At the end of each chapter, respond to the review questions and use the guided solutions to assess your response.
