Claude Lévi-Strauss
The Formative Years

Lévi-Strauss is one of the major intellectual figures of the twentieth century. His theory of structuralism has been influential not only in anthropology, but across the entire field of the humanities and social sciences. This book looks at the formative period of his career, from the 1940s to the early 1960s, where he attempts to define both his own place in anthropology and the place of anthropology in the wider context of the human sciences in France. Through a close reading of key texts, Christopher Johnson provides an introduction to important aspects of Lévi-Strauss's thought, at the same time posing more general questions concerning the construction of theory and the different modes of conceptualization that inform theory. Johnson looks at the ideological and autobiographical dimensions of Lévi-Strauss's work, and demonstrates how the impact of structuralism as an intellectual movement has clearly been greater than the sum of its theoretical parts.

CHRISTOPHER JOHNSON is Professor of French at the University of Nottingham and a member of the editorial board of Paragraph: A Journal of Modern Critical Theory. His previous publications include System and Writing in the Philosophy of Jacques Derrida (Cambridge University Press, 1993), and Derrida: The Scene of Writing (London: Phoenix, 1997).

La génération à laquelle j'appartiens fut essentiellement préoccupée d'introduire un peu plus de rigueur dans nos disciplines; elle s'est donc efforcée, chaque fois qu'elle étudiait des phénomènes, de limiter le nombre des variables qu'il fallait considérer.

(Lévi-Strauss, 'Anthropologie, histoire, idéologie', 184–5)

(My generation was essentially concerned with introducing a little more rigour into our disciplines. So each time that we studied a particular set of phenomena, we tried as much as possible to limit the number of variables under consideration.)

I would like to thank the editors and publishers for permission to reproduce the relevant sections of these publications.

I wish also to express my gratitude to the different institutions which, at the various stages of this project, have provided me with the freedom, facilities and stimulating environments necessary to its completion: Trinity College, Cambridge; the Humanities Research Centre at Irvine, California; the universities of Keele and Nottingham. I wish to thank the many individuals, friends and colleagues, who in their different ways have given me encouragement, inspiration and support, in particular Malcolm Bowie, Marian Hobson, Diana Holmes, Peggy Kamuf, Diana Knight, Judith Still and Michael Worton. I thank Jessica Kuper and the editorial team at Cambridge University Press for their sympathetic and expert guidance through the publication of this book. I thank the three anonymous readers whose informed comments and criticisms were so essential in the final stages of the project. Finally, I wish to pay tribute to the intellectual inspiration of a thinker whose work has always helped, and continues to help me to think, Jacques Derrida.
