

Contents

---

Acknowledgements	page ix
Introduction	1
Part 1
1 The survival of Chartist assumptions	9
The development of Social-Democratic forms	12
‘True democracy’ and the Socialist League	17
2 Democracy and socialism in the 1890s	30
Fabian democracy and its Social-Democratic critics	30
‘Real democracy’: the Clarion version	43
3 Democracy and the industrial struggle	57
The background to trades federation during the nineteenth century	58
The 1890s	62
Part 2
4 Conflicts in the ILP	75
Democracy and the ILP programme	76
The ILP presidency and the position of Keir Hardie: Labour Leader versus the Clarion	79
‘Socialist unity’ and the Clarion Referendum	83
5 The pressure to federate: the industrial struggle in the late 1890s	88
Rumblings	89
Insecurity and the engineering crisis	94
6 The rise and fall of the Clarion federation	109
The war of the schemes	109
The crunch: NIGFTLU versus the GFTU	121
	vii

viii Contents

Part 3

7	The early 1900s: a hinge period	139
	The National Democratic League: 'belated and mutilated chartism'	141
	School boards or county councils? Socialists and the 1902 Education Act	146
	Adult suffrage or 'Women's suffrage'?	153
8	Socialists and the state	162
	The 'gulf' reaffirmed	162
	'Popular government' in early twentieth-century Britain	166
	The referendum as 'practical politics': 1910-1911	172
9	Parliamentary socialism? Labour in parliament	178
	A programme for Labour? 1900-1906	179
	A leader for Labour?	183
	'Roads to ruin': the programme and the question of accountability after 1906	184
10	Parliamentary democracy? 'Fred's obsession' and the path to the Bradford resolution	196
	A critique of Cabinet government	196
	'Some foul reptile . . . dropping poison'. The attack on the ILP's own 'Cabinet'	202
	The 'Bradford' policy and the 'Green Manifesto'	207
11	Background to syndicalism: the legacy of the NIGFLTU's failure	218
	P. J. King	219
	Institutional inertia	220
	Strategy and structures	225
	Alternatives to 'leadership'?	239
12	Avoiding the 'Servile State'. The impact of Syndicalism and Guild Socialism	246
	Syndicalism's Social-Democratic critics	250
	The problem of management and executive authority	255
	The servile state	261
	Guild Socialism: the road to an answer?	264
13	1914: an emerging consensus on the eve of Armageddon	270
	Partial success for Jowett	271
	Proportional Representation	274
	Labour and democracy: the conferences of 1913 and 1914	276
	Coda: Home Rule and Ireland – the other July Crisis of 1914	285
	Conclusions	290
	Appendix Federation for local Labour historians – and for national	305
	Index	314