Acknowledgements

This book is based on fieldwork carried out under a scholarship in the Department of Prehistory and Anthropology of the Australian National University, and on a thesis written while I was a postgraduate student there. I am grateful to that institution for the financial support and stimulating environment it provided.

Before my fieldwork, Donald Laycock helped me invaluablely by making available his field notes and tapes on the Manambu language. I would like to thank Anthony Forge, Alfred Gell and Robert Tonkinson for their academic supervision; Michael Young for the encouraging, and very generous, interest he took in my work; and my fellow graduate students, especially Jon Altman and Jadran Mimica, for much academic inspiration. Andrew Strathern, Donald Tuzin and the late Ralph Bulmer all made insightful and constructive criticisms of my thesis.

I am grateful to Kilian McDaid, of the Department of Environmental Studies of the University of Ulster, for preparing the maps and figures for this book, and to the Royal Anthropological Institute and the American Ethnological Society for permission to use material from the following articles:

- 1987. Cultural Efflorescence and Political Evolution on the Sepik River. American Ethnologist 14 (3): 491–507. Copyright © 1987 American Anthropological Association. All rights reserved.
- 1988. Magical Exchange of the Preconditions of Production in a Sepik River Village. Man (N.S.) 23 (2): 319–33.
- 1989. Magical and Material Politics in Melanesia. Man (N.S.) 24 (1): 1–20.

In Papua New Guinea, Micah Kalinoe and Ambrose Vakinap gave me my first introduction to Manambu culture. At Ambunti, I should like to thank the Assistant District Officer, Ray Bray, Horst and Eugenie Schmidt of the Summer Institute of Linguistics, and Alan Gallagher of Las Kampani for their hospitality and practical help. My greatest debt is to my hosts at Avatip, of whom I must especially mention Narwangøn, Wapikas, Francis Kamimeli, Kamatəp, Wawiandu, Sunggwarwakøn, Tapi, Mandjikəmban, Gabriel
