The following work is a revised version of a dissertation submitted for the Ph.D. degree at Cambridge University in 1970. It is based on fieldwork carried out from October 1965 until September 1967. The research was supported by a Fellowship and Research Grant from the National Institute of Mental Health, Bethesda, Maryland, USA. In revising the dissertation I have made no attempt to keep up to date with current Indian politics. The book thus deals with events which took place in 1965–7 or earlier and does not touch on such important later events as the 1969 split in the Congress Party. I do not feel that this constitutes a serious weakness, however, for as far as I know nothing has occurred to alter the patterns of stratification and alliances described here.

I am grateful to my supervisor, Dr E. R. Leach, for much useful advice. His comments, as well as those of my dissertation examiners, S. J. Tambiah and F. G. Bailey, have been very helpful.

The late Professor Mrs Irawati Karve advised me while I was in India. It was she who suggested that I work in Phaltan and I also am indebted to her for sharing with me her vast knowledge of things Indian. Mr and Mrs B. V. Nimbkar, Professor Karve's daughter and son-in-law, kindly took me into their home in Phaltan while I was searching for a suitable village and introduced me to many of Phaltan's leading citizens. Mrs Y. B. Damle taught me Marathi with great patience and thoroughness.

I enjoyed and profited by many stimulating conversations with my colleagues J. P. Parry and Maxine Bernsen both in India and in Cambridge.

Nilakantrao and Tarabai Kamble, with whom I lived in Girvi, gave me a home, a family, and love. They made me feel a part of Maharashtra and I dedicate this book to them.
