When is it justifiable to exclude a person who wishes to enter a country? What are the acceptable moral bases for immigration policy? These questions lie at the heart of this book, the first interdisciplinary study of the fundamental normative issues underpinning immigration policy.

A distinguished group of economists, political scientists, and philosophers offer a provocative discussion of this complex topic. Among the issues addressed are the proper role of the state in supporting a particular culture, the possible destabilization of the political and social life of a country through immigration, the size and distribution of economic losses and gains, and the legitimacy of discriminating against potential immigrants in favor of members of the resident population.

The need for serious consideration of this subject is beyond question. This volume should advance discussion in an area of great practical as well as philosophical importance.

This exciting new series reflects and fosters the most original research taking place in the study of law and legal theory by publishing the most adventurous monographs in the field as well as collections of essays. It is a specific aim of the series to traverse the boundaries between disciplines and to form bridges between traditional studies of law and many other areas of the human sciences. Books in the series will be of interest not only to philosophers and legal theorists but also to political scientists, sociologists, economists, psychologists, and criminologists.

Other books in the series

Jeffrie G. Murphy and Jean Hampton: Forgiveness and mercy
 Stephen R. Munzer: A theory of property
 R. G. Frey and Christopher W. Morris (eds.): Liability and responsibility: Essays in law and morals
 Robert F. Schopp: Automatism, insanity, and the psychology of criminal responsibility
 Steven J. Burton: Judging in good faith
 Jules L. Coleman: Risks and wrong
 Suzanne Uniacke: Permissible killing: The self-defense justification of homicide
