

Cambridge University Press

978-0-521-05273-3 - The Making of a New 'Indian' Art: Artists, Aesthetics and Nationalism in Bengal, c. 1850-1920

Tapati Guha-Thakurta

Table of Contents

More informationContents

List of illustrations	page xii
Photographic acknowledgements	xix
Abbreviations	xx
Glossary	xxi
Preface	xxv
Introduction	i
1 Artisans, artists and popular picture production in nineteenth-century Calcutta	11
2 The art-school artists in Calcutta: professions, practice and patronage in the late nineteenth century	45
3 Indigenous commercial enterprise and the popular art market in Calcutta: the emergence of a new Indian iconography	78
4 Tradition and nationalism in Indian art: art-histories and aesthetic discourse in Bengal in the late nineteenth century	117
5 Orientalism and the new claims for Indian art: the ideas of Havell, Coomaraswamy, Okakura and Nivedita	146
6 The contest over tradition and nationalism: differing aesthetic formulations for 'Indian' painting	185
7 Artists and aesthetics: Abanindranath Tagore and the 'New School of Indian Painting'	226
Epilogue The Twenties	313
Bibliography	327
Index	341