ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

It is a pleasure to acknowledge the debts I owe to various individuals and institutions for the assistance they provided during the writing of this book. I have profited enormously from discussions with my colleagues and ex-colleagues at the Universities of Manchester and New South Wales; in particular I would like to thank Professor Bruce Williams, Professor Werner Stark and Mr Philip Leeson of Manchester, and Professor Gordon Rimmer and Dr Igor Gordijew of New South Wales for reading and criticising various chapters of an earlier version of the work. My thanks are also due to Professor Dharma Kumar and Dr W. J. Macpherson for invaluable comments on the final draft. My greatest debt is to Professor A. W. Coats who not only read the entire work and made many suggestions for improvement, but also gave generously his advice and encouragement. The encouragement and help received from my father, Professor K. R. Srinivasa Iyengar, at every stage of the preparation of this book is incalculable. I am greatly indebted to Stephen and Joan Bach for making my stay in England pleasant and fruitful while I was collecting material for writing this book. However I am alone responsible for errors and shortcomings that remain.

I wish to thank the Librarians of the India Office Library, British Library, London University Library, London School of Economics Library, Manchester University Library, John Rylands Library, Cambridge University Library, Bodleian Library, Library of Christchurch College, Nottingham University Library, National Archives of India, Bombay Secretariat Library, Tamilnadu Archives, Fisher Library, Public Library of New South Wales, University of New South Wales Library, Victorian State Library and National Library of Australia for providing much efficient helpfulness. I would like to thank in particular Mr Martin Moir of the India Office Library for giving valuable bibliographic assistance.

Thanks are due to the Houblon-Norman Fund, British Council, the University of Manchester and the University of New South Wales for financial assistance they provided at various times.

Finally, I must thank my wife, Prabha, for the many ways in which she has contributed to this work.
