

CONTENTS

List of Illustrations	page xvii
List of Tables	xix
List of Abbreviations	xxi
Acknowledgments	xxiii
Author's Note	xxiv
8 INTRODUCTION	I
9 THE YU CHIA (CONFUCIANS) AND CONFUCIANISM	3
(a) Introduction,	p. 3
(b) General characteristics of the School,	p. 5
(c) The ambivalent attitude towards science,	p. 12
(d) Doctrines of human nature,	p. 16
(e) Theories of the 'ladder of souls',	p. 21
(f) The humanism of Hsün Chhing,	p. 26
(g) Confucianism as the orthodoxy of feudal bureaucratism,	p. 30
(h) Confucianism as a 'religion',	p. 31
10 THE TAO CHIA (TAOISTS) AND TAOISM		33
(a) Introduction,	p. 33
(b) The Taoist conception of the Tao ,	p. 36
(c) The unity and spontaneity of Nature,	p. 46
(1) Automata and the philosophy of organism in Chuang Chou,	p. 53
(2) Taoism, causality and teleology,	p. 55
(d) The approach to Nature; the psychology of scientific observation,	p. 56
(1) The water symbol and the feminine symbol,	p. 57
(2) The concept of jang (yieldingness),	p. 61
(3) Ataraxy,	p. 63
(4) Action contrary to Nature (wei) and its opposite (wu wei),	p. 68
(5) Taoist empiricism,	p. 71

- (e) Change, transformation and relativity, p. 74
 - (1) Taoism and magic, p. 83
 - (f) The attitude of the Taoists to knowledge and to society, p. 86
 - (1) The pattern of mysticism and empiricism, p. 89
 - (2) Science and social welfare, p. 98
 - (3) The return to cooperative primitivity, p. 99
 - (g) The attack on feudalism, p. 100
 - (1) Taoist condemnation of class-differentiation, p. 104
 - (2) The words phu and hun-tun (social homogeneity), p. 107
 - (3) The legendary rebels, p. 115
 - (4) The 'diggers', Hsü Hsing and Chhen Hsiang, p. 120
 - (5) The 'knack-passages' and technology, p. 121
 - (6) European parallels; the 'Golden Age', p. 127
 - (7) Science and democracy, p. 130
 - (h) Shamans, Wu, and Fang-Shih, p. 132
 - (i) The aims of the individual in Taoism; the achievement of material immortality as a Hsien, p. 139
 - (1) Respiratory techniques, p. 143
 - (2) Heliotherapeutic techniques, p. 145
 - (3) Gymnastic techniques, p. 145
 - (4) Sexual techniques, p. 146
 - (5) Hagiography of the immortals, p. 152
 - (6) Hsien-ship and organic philosophy, p. 153
 - (j) Taoism as a religion, p. 154
 - (k) Conclusions, p. 161
- 11 THE MO CHIA (MOHISTS) AND THE MING CHIA (LOGICIANS). page 165
- (a) Mo Ti's religious empiricism, p. 166
 - (b) Scientific thought in the Mohist Canon, p. 171
 - (c) The philosophy of Kungsun Lung, p. 185
 - (d) The paradoxes of Hui Shih, p. 189
 - (e) Logic, formal or dialectical?, p. 198
- 12 THE FA CHIA (LEGALISTS) 204

CONTENTS

xi

13 THE FUNDAMENTAL IDEAS OF CHINESE
SCIENCE page 216

- (a) Introduction, p. 216
- (b) Etymological origins of some of the most important Chinese scientific words, p. 218
- (c) The school of Naturalists (Yin-Yang Chia), Tsou Yen, and the origin and development of the Five-Element theory, p. 232
 - (1) Comparison with element theories of other peoples, p. 245
 - (2) The Naturalist-Confucian synthesis in the Han, p. 247
- (d) Enumeration orders and symbolic correlations, p. 253
 - (1) The enumeration orders and their combinations, p. 253
 - (i) The cosmogonic order, p. 254
 - (ii) The mutual production order, p. 255
 - (iii) The mutual conquest order, p. 256
 - (iv) The 'modern' order, p. 256
 - (v) Rates of change; the principles of control and and masking, p. 257
 - (2) The symbolic correlations and the schools which evolved them, p. 261
 - (3) Contemporary criticism and later acceptance, p. 265
 - (4) 'Pythagorean' numerology; Tsêng Shen, p. 268
- (e) The theory of the two fundamental forces, p. 273
- (f) Correlative thinking and its significance; Tung Chung-Shu, p. 279
 - (1) Roots of the philosophy of organism, p. 291
 - (2) Element theories and experimental science in China and Europe, p. 293
 - (3) Macrocosm and microcosm, p. 294

- (g) The system of the Book of Changes, p. 304
- (1) From omen proverbs to abstract concepts, p. 311
 - (2) A universal concept-repository, p. 322
 - (3) Significance of the trigram and hexagram symbols in later Chinese scientific thought, p. 329
 - (4) The Book of Changes as the 'administrative approach' to natural phenomena; its relation to organised bureaucratic society and to the philosophy of organism, p. 335
 - (5) Addendum on the Book of Changes and the binary arithmetic of Leibniz, p. 340
- 14 THE PSEUDO-SCIENCES AND THE SCEPTICAL TRADITION page 346
- (a) Divination, p. 346
 - (1) Scapulimancy and milfoil lots, p. 347
 - (2) Use of the symbols of the Book of Changes, p. 349
 - (3) Astrology, p. 351
 - (4) Chronomancy; lucky and unlucky days, p. 357
 - (5) Prognostication by the denary and duodenary cyclical characters, p. 357
 - (6) Geomancy (Fêng-Shui), p. 359
 - (7) Physiognomy and cheiromancy, p. 363
 - (8) Oneiromancy, p. 364
 - (9) Glyphomancy, p. 364
 - (b) Sceptical trends in Chou and early Han times, p. 365
 - (c) The sceptical philosophy of Wang Chhung, p. 368
 - (d) Centrifugal cosmogony, p. 371
 - (e) Wang Chhung's denial of anthropocentrism, p. 374
 - (f) The Phenomenalists and Wang Chhung's struggle against them, p. 378
 - (g) Wang Chhung and human destiny, p. 382
 - (h) The sceptical tradition in later centuries, p. 386
 - (i) Chinese humanistic studies as the crowning achievement of the sceptical tradition, p. 390
- 15 BUDDHIST THOUGHT 396
- (a) General characteristics, p. 396
 - (b) The lesser and the greater careers, p. 403

CONTENTS

xiii

- (c) The Buddhist evangelisation of China, p. 406
 - (d) The reaction of Chinese Naturalism, p. 410
 - (e) Influences of Buddhism on Chinese science and scientific thought, p. 419
 - (f) Tantrism and its relation with Taoism, p. 425
 - (g) Conclusions, p. 430
- 16 CHIN AND THANG TAOISTS, AND SUNG
NEO-CONFUCIANS page 432
- (a) Taoist thought in the Wei and Chin periods, p. 432
 - (1) Wang Pi and the Revisionists, p. 432
 - (2) Pao Ching-Yen and the Radicals, p. 434
 - (3) Ko Hung and scientific thought, p. 437
 - (b) Taoist thought in the Thang and Sung periods; Chhen Thuan and Than Chhiao, p. 442
 - (c) Li Ao and the origins of Neo-Confucianism, p. 452
 - (d) The Neo-Confucians, p. 455
 - (1) Chu Hsi and his predecessors, p. 455
 - (2) The 'Supreme Pole', p. 460
 - (3) The study of universal pattern; the concepts Chhi (matter-energy) and Li (organisation), p. 472
 - (4) Evolutionary Naturalism in a cyclical setting, p. 485
 - (5) The denial of immortality and deity, p. 490
 - (e) Neo-Confucianism and the golden period of natural science in the Sung, p. 493
 - (f) Chu Hsi, Leibniz, and the philosophy of organism, p. 496
- 17 SUNG AND MING IDEALISTS, AND THE
LAST GREAT FIGURES OF INDIGENOUS
NATURALISM 506
- (a) The search for a monistic philosophy, p. 506
 - (b) The Idealists; Lu Hsiang-Shan and Wang Yang-Ming, p. 507
 - (c) The reaffirmation of materialism; Wang Chhuan-Shan, p. 511

- (d) The rediscovery of Han thought; Yen Yuan, Li Kung, and Tai Chen, p. 513
 - (e) The 'new, or experimental, philosophy'; Huang Lü-Chuang, p. 516
- 18 HUMAN LAW AND THE LAWS OF NATURE
IN CHINA AND THE WEST page 518
- (a) Introduction, p. 518
 - (b) The common root of the natural law of the jurists, and the laws of Nature of science, p. 519
 - (c) Natural law and positive law in Chinese jurisprudence; the resistance to codification, p. 521
 - (1) Law and Phenomenalism; the unity of the ethical and cosmic order, p. 526
 - (2) Social aspects of law; Chinese and Greek, p. 530
 - (d) Stages in the Mesopotamian-European differentiation of natural law and the laws of Nature, p. 533
 - (e) The acceptance of the legislative metaphor in Renaissance natural science, p. 539
 - (f) Chinese thought and the laws of Nature, p. 543
 - (1) The words fa (positive law), li (good customs, mores), and i (justice), p. 544
 - (2) The phrase Thien fa (natural law) and the word ming (decree), p. 547 .
 - (3) The word lü (regulations, and standard pitch-pipes), p. 550
 - (4) The word tu (measured degrees of celestial motion), p. 553
 - (5) The expression chi-kang (net, or nexus, of natural causation), p. 554
 - (6) The word hsien (constitution), p. 556
 - (7) The words Li (pattern) and tsé (rules applicable to parts of wholes), p. 557
 - (8) Non-action and laws of Nature, p. 562
 - (9) The Chinese denial of a celestial lawgiver an affirmation of Nature's spontaneity and freedom, p. 563
 - (10) Li and tsé in Neo-Confucianism; the philosophy of organic levels, p. 565

CONTENTS

xv

- (g) Law in Buddhist thought, p. 570
- (h) Order which excludes law, p. 572
 - (1) Judicial trials of animals; contrasting European and Chinese attitudes to biological abnormalities, p. 574
 - (2) Dominance psychology and excessive abstraction, p. 576
 - (3) The comparative philosophy of law in China and Europe, p. 578
 - (4) Varying conceptions of deity, p. 580
- (i) Conclusions, p. 582

BIBLIOGRAPHIES page 585Abbreviations, p. 586A. Chinese books before +1800, p. 590B. Chinese and Japanese books and journal articles since +1800, p. 609C. Books and journal articles in Western Languages, p. 616

GENERAL INDEX 655

Table of Chinese Dynasties 697