Acknowledgements

It would be impossible to name individually all those who have contributed in one way or another towards this work. Numerous people have provided advice, ideas and encouragement at various stages and conversations with many of those who lived through the events covered in the book were extremely helpful. Without their comments it would have been very difficult to make much sense of what was happening.

Special mention must be made of Vladimír Kusín who supervised my PhD at Glasgow University and made innumerable useful suggestions. I would also like to thank those who made it possible for me to spend a year in Prague on a British Council studentship. My supervisors there were Čestmír Amort and Václav Král and they gave some helpful general advice. They also made access to some sources easier as did Mrs Blühova of Bratislava on an earlier occasion. More recently the editors of the NASEES monograph series gave helpful advice on how to reduce the work to publishable length.

I am also indebted to C. Crampton, Myra Black, Ella Kininmonth, and Janette Johnstone who typed various parts of the work, and to those who provided financial assistance. For two years at Glasgow University I was supported by a Francis T. Hunter Scholarship and for a period after that I was dependent on my wife who also spent a great deal of time improving the successive versions of the work.
