

Contents

Preface	page vii
Acknowledgements	ix
1 Re-discovering the English past	1
Materials for the study of the English past	2
The English tradition of antiquarian and topographical research	4
The indexing, cataloguing and publication of English records	6
Guides to the nature, use and reading of English documents	9
The need for a further introduction	11
2 Some problems and limitations	13
The problem of preserving the continuity of English documents
The problem of preserving the interconnectedness of English records	14
The choice of a particular case study	16
The parish of Earls Colne	17
Problems of typicality and generalization	21
Documentary sources created by private individuals	23
Records produced by other institutions and corporations	27
Documentary sources outside the span of this introduction	28
Types of historical material not considered in this introduction	29
3 Records of the State	32
Government and administration	33
Finance	36
Common law courts	43
Equity and conciliar courts	51
Commissions of the Peace and Quarter Sessions	59

Contents

4	Records of estates	65
	Surveys of rights	66
	Accounts	67
	Freehold property	69
	Copyhold property	72
	Conclusion	93
5	Ecclesiastical jurisdiction	95
	Records of church administration and finance	104
	Mere office or summary correction records	106
	Records of plenary or instance jurisdiction	110
	Church as registry: documents of record concerning testaments	114
	Church as registry: baptisms, marriages and burials	116
	Church as licensing authority	119
	Church as poor law administrator	121
	Conclusions	125
	Bibliography	127