Acknowledgments

Foremost among those who have generously and graciously given of their time and knowledge in helping me prepare this book were a large number of Czechs and Slovaks, most of whom would prefer to remain anonymous. Particularly helpful was the encounter with leading Czechoslovak reformers provided by the Universities of Reading and Glasgow at their 1971 seminar on the Czechoslovak reform movement. As always, the excellent resources of the Czechoslovak research unit of Radio Free Europe were of great assistance. I am also indebted to Professors Leonard Schapiro and Shlomo Avineri for their continued encouragement and advice, as well as Tatiana Hoffman and Yehuda Lahav for their comments and suggestions.

I would also like to thank Terry Bender, Peter Brod (in Munich), Ilana Diamant, and my typists Malka Kroll, Shelley Einis, and Claire Lipton. I would particularly like to thank Michael Shafir for his preparation of the index. Thanks to the hospitality of my friends at Kibbutz Nahal Oz I was able to write part of the book in their peaceful surroundings, and the Eliezer Kaplan School of Economics and Social Sciences of the Hebrew University of Jerusalem generously provided me with the necessary research funds.

A word of thanks is also due to the staff of the Cambridge University Press for their patience and much appreciated advice.
