

Cambridge University Press

978-0-521-10213-1 - The Professionalization of Psychology in Nazi Germany

Ulfried Geuter

Table of Contents

More information

Contents

List of tables	page viii
Note to readers of the English edition	ix
Preface	xi
Preface to the 1988 revised German pocketbook edition	xv
Abbreviations	xix
Map	xxi
1 Introduction	1
Decline or continuity	7
Science in the Third Reich and historical theory	13
From discipline to profession: a historical model of professionalization	20
The problem of sources	33
2 On the way to becoming an independent discipline: the institutionalization of psychology in the universities to 1941	39
Psychologists as an academic group: the formation of a scientific community	40
Psychologists with chairs and psychological chairs: comments on terminology	42
The institutionalization of psychology in universities and technical colleges before 1933	44
The Nazis come to power: dismissals and the reaction in the discipline	52
New chairs and appointments, 1933–41	57
The strengthening of the discipline: quantitative aspects of institutionalization, 1933–45	74
3 The potential of psychology for selecting workers and officers: diagnostics, character, and expression	83

General suitability for work and psychotechnical aptitude diagnostics	85
Work virtues, work motivation, characterology of the working individual, and psychological leadership	89
Expression psychology, characterology, and the selection of officers	94
The Prussian officer and psychology	105
An aside: changing metaphors and psychological theory	110
Diagnostic procedures in the Wehrmacht and the situation tests	113
Will, courage, and the limits of psychological prognosis	119
The dysfunctionality of race psychology and typology for practical psychology	121
4 Psychologists at work: the start of new professional activities in industry and the army and their expansion in the war economy	125
First concepts and footholds for the profession of psychologist	126
The twenties: opportunities in labor administration and industry	128
The employment structure around 1930 and the development of industrial psychology with the Four-Year Plan of 1936	132
The occupation of army psychologist before the reintroduction of conscription in 1935	136
Professional activities in pedagogical and medical fields	141
War economy and industrial psychologists	147
The expansion of the Wehrmacht and Wehrmacht Psychology to 1942	153
5 Legitimation strategies and professional policy	163
Ideological or practical usefulness: part I	165
Ideological or practical usefulness: part II	174
Inward and outward unity	180
The politics of the professional organizations	182
6 University courses in psychology and the development of the Diploma Examination Regulations of 1941	186
Proposals for professional qualification before 1940	189
The assessor examination of Wehrmacht Psychology as a model for the DPO	192
Quacks and monopolies	193
The commission to draw up the DPO	194
The draft regulations and Moede's alternative	196
The logic of the examination subjects	199
The question of professional ethics and the selection of students	204
Ministerial consultations and the approval of the DPO	205

Contents	vii
The diploma in psychology and the rationalization of university courses during the war	207
Diploma and state examination	208
7 The Diploma Examination Regulations and their consequences	210
Examining boards and examination regulations	211
The effects on academic appointments policy	213
The DPO, teaching, and subject matter	220
The new professional group and its public reception	225
The rivalry of physicians and the deletion of medical examination topics	228
8 The disbanding of psychological services in the Luftwaffe and the army in 1942 and the reorientation of psychology during the war	233
The profession after the dissolution	242
The use of psychology in the National Socialist People's Welfare Organization during the war	244
The image of psychology after the demise of psychological services in the Luftwaffe and the army	249
The 1943 plan for the specialization of psychological training	252
Psychology in the "war effort of the human sciences"	253
9 Self-deception, loyalty, and solidarity: professionalization as a subjective process	259
Practical activity: attraction and loophole	260
Practice as self-deception: oases, morality, and objectivity	262
Passing the test	264
New loyalties	265
Professionalization as belonging	266
Conformist restrictions on the rationality of scientific means	267
10 Science, profession, and power	270
Professionalization and the history of the social sciences	276
The network of power and Nazi science policy	279
Rationality and ethics	283
Comments on sources	286
Bibliography	295
Index	329