This monograph is an expanded version of a chapter of my doctoral thesis 'The Relation of God to Ethics in the Eighth Century Prophets', submitted to the University of Oxford in 1974. My thanks are due in the first place to Canon J. A. Baker, who supervised the research on which it rested. I should also like to record my gratitude to Dr R. E. Clements who, as Editor, accepted this work for the Monograph Series, and who also made helpful comments and suggestions; to the Society for Old Testament Study and the Board of Management of the Pusey and Ellerton Fund, who contributed generously to the cost of publication; and to the staff of Cambridge University Press, and especially Mr Eric Van Tassel, who made many helpful suggestions for improvements in style and presentation. The greater part of my research was done in the Bodleian Library, and I am particularly grateful to the staff of the Radcliffe Camera for their friendly efficiency; while I owe a debt to many colleagues and pupils in Oxford for encouragement, criticism, and advice.

To three people I owe debts of a different kind: to my wife Mary, for unfailing support throughout the time that this monograph has been in preparation; and to my parents, to whom I dedicate it, for their encouragement and practical help during the years of research which, without their generosity and kindness, would have led nowhere.
