Acknowledgments

Special thanks goes to the sixteen members of the research team, whose tenacity, psychological understanding of the squatters, and rigorous work discipline have made possible this demanding research. I am gratified to know that some of these people have joined various institutions in Turkey and put to good use their research experience acquired in the gecekondu study. Thanks are due to the Department of Social Studies at the Middle East Technical University in Ankara and Bogaziçi University (formerly Roberts College) of Istanbul for supporting financially the original research; to the Comparative World History Program, and especially the Land Tenure Center, at the University of Wisconsin, Madison, for its research assistance. Finally, thanks go to the late Lloyd T. Fallers, to Janet Abu-Lughod, and to Joan Nelson for their suggestions and comments, and to the Department of History at the University of Wisconsin, Madison, for its clerical assistance.
