ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Most of this study was written in 1972 and 1973 during my sixteen-month stay in Chile. The visit to Chile was made possible by generous financial assistance from the Stockholm School of Economics, whose support in this and other respects I gratefully acknowledge.

Numerous friends and colleagues have given invaluable encouragement and support to me in my work. Some have submitted earlier drafts of this study to stimulating and sometimes quite severe criticism; others have helped to reduce the number of errors in my treatment of the English language, typed the final manuscripts or simply given me the indispensable moral support I badly needed to be able to finish the work. I wish to thank them all. But in particular I wish to thank the Chilean people, whose warmth, hospitality and courage impressed me so much while I was their guest and whose struggle against the tyranny installed in their country on 11 September, 1973 deserves not only our sympathy but our active solidarity and support as well.
