Preface

Twenty years ago, perhaps even fifteen years ago, one might arguably have claimed that a new study in generative grammar could be read and understood by an intelligent layman with no more than a rudimentary background in linguistics. Though some may lament those days, it is now the case that theoretically oriented work in generative grammar reflects the recent history of the field in a much more integral way, both with regard to the sense in which most new proposals extend or react to others already in the literature, and with respect to the increasing explanatory force of the deep principles which have been evoked to motivate a wide range of the syntactic analyses developed over the last twenty-five years. These changes, while they reflect an impressive amount of progress, have inevitably led to a greater degree of complexity in current linguistic argumentation, and some interested scholars may very well feel a certain bewilderment with regard to debates that even five or six years ago seemed more familiar.

The central proposal of this study involves the basic relations in terms of which many central grammatical principles, some of them proposed quite recently, are expressed. Consequently, the complexity of argumentation I have just alluded to will be immediately apparent, and those not familiar with recent developments in generative grammar may find themselves on not so familiar ground. With these considerations in mind, I have provided some general theoretical background to the central principles involved to make this book as accessible as possible. What is helpful to some may, however, be too familiar to others, and so most discussion of the general theoretical framework is confined to the first chapter. The second chapter, though it begins in the same introductory vein, gradually comes to focus on the central issues I address. Scholars familiar with recent work may choose to skim Chapter 1 and go on to Chapter 2.

As evidence that the field is moving quickly, I have included an Epilog (Chapter 8) which reassesses some of the proposals made in the body of this work in light of some developments that have come about since the first

Acknowledgements

Over the years since I first began this research, a great many people have helped me in this work, and I am pleased to have an opportunity to thank them here.

An earlier version of this manuscript was submitted as my doctoral thesis, and I would like to thank the members of my doctoral committee, Ken Hale, Jim Higginbotham and Noam Chomsky. I cannot thank Noam Chomsky enough for his patience, advice and inspiration which have influenced every aspect of this work. It is a great pleasure to acknowledge my intellectual debt to him.

I am also grateful to all of those people, most of them good friends, who have been especially helpful as both linguists and native informants, among them Patrizia Cordin, Isabelle Haik, Jaklin Kornfilt, Rita Manzini, Eric Reuland, Anne Rochette, Mamoru Saito, Jean-Roger Vergnaud and Leo Wetzels.

A number of people in addition to those mentioned above made substantial contributions by commenting extensively on partial or early drafts and/or regular discussion, including Neil Elliott, Osvaldo Jaeggli, Richard Kayne, Robert May, David Pesetsky, Danilo Salamanca and Barry Schein.

Then there are a lot of people who have helped so much in a variety of additional ways, providing intellectual excitement, friendship and support. Many of their ideas, not always distorted out of shape, have found their way into this work. I thank Mark Baltin, Adriana Belletti, Hagit Borer, Denis Bouchard, Michael Brody, Luigi Burzio, Dick Carter, Janet deCarrico, François Dell, Wilson Gray, Jacqueline Guéron, Roger Higgins, Jim Huang, Bob Ingria, Kyle Johnson, Phil Lesourd, Marcia Lind, Robert Matthews, Gary Milsark, Hans Obenauer, Jean-Yves Pollock, Bill Poser, Henk van Riemsdijk, Luigi Rizzi, Tom Roeper, Donca Steriade, Tim Stowell, Tarald Taraldsen, Esther Torrego, Eric Wehrli, Edwin Williams and Maria-Luisa Zubizarreta. Special thanks also go to Hagit

xiv Acknowledgements

Borer, Tim Stowell, Yukio Otsu, Lauri Carlson and David Pesetsky, who shared the MIT experience with me most fully, and to Lila Gleitman and Morris Halle, for particularly effective moral support, and for inspiring by example.

A number of institutions also deserve special thanks. To the Department of Linguistics and Philosophy at MIT, I owe the lion's share of my intellectual development, and I gratefully acknowledge many years of financial support. I also am grateful to the Department of Psychology at the University of Pennsylvania for awarding me a Sloan Foundation post-doctoral fellowship to support my research during the academic year 1982–3, and the Mellon Foundation at the Linguistics Department of New York University for a similar post-doctoral award during the academic year 1983–4.

For her unique contribution, I also reserve special thanks for my grandmother, Etta Weissberger, without whom none of this would have been possible.

Finally, I thank my wife, Susan Sidlauskas, for her faith in me, her patience, and her love.
