

Contents

Preface	page ix
PART I. PROBLEMS OF DEFINITION, METHOD, AND INTERPRETATION
1 Is the diary novel definable as a genre?	3
2 The impasses of genre criticism	9
3 The diary novel reconsidered	24
4 The diary form: techniques	31
5 Saying "I"	39
PART II. THE DIARY NOVEL IN THE EIGHTEENTH AND EARLY NINETEENTH CENTURIES
6 Diaries and diary fiction	55
7 English origins	64
Satires	67
Defoe's Robinson Crusoe and the influence of sea journals and Puritan diaries	68
8 Letter-journal novels and the influence of Richardson	75
9 Wertherian diary novels	86
10 The diary novel in the nineteenth century	100
PART III. THE DIARY NOVEL IN THE LATE NINETEENTH AND EARLY TWENTIETH CENTURIES
11 The publication of the journaux intimes and the fin-de-siècle diary novel	115

viii	CONTENTS
12	Overreflectedness	119
13	Psychological fiction and pathological states Toward stream of consciousness	126 133
14	Unreliable narration: André Gide	138
15	Reliable narration: Rainer Maria Rilke's Die Aufzeichnungen des Malte Laurids Brigge	156
16	Women writers	173
PART IV. THE CONTEMPORARY DIARY NOVEL
17	The diary novel in the twentieth century	185
18	Max Frisch: Stiller	197
19	Michel Butor: L'Emploi du temps	213
20	Doris Lessing: The Golden Notebook	233
	Notes	246
	Bibliography of diary fiction	274
	Index of names and titles	299
	Index of subjects	305