ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

A volume of this size is the work of many people, and we must begin by thanking all those who have contributed to the text. Behind these are a large number of people who have made equally important contributions.

Our fieldwork was funded by grants from a variety of sources: the British Academy; the Dorset Archaeological Committee; Glasgow University Excavation Fund; the Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission; Leeds University Research Fund; the Prehistoric Society; Reading University Research Board; and the Society of Antiquaries. Research on the Pitt Rivers archive in Salisbury was supported by the Carnegie Fund for the Universities of Scotland, and Mark Bowden's post-excavation work on the Down Farm ring ditch by the Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission. Two grants from the British Academy allowed the project to employ Martin Cook to prepare many of the illustrations. Our departments in Glasgow and Reading also provided considerable help in kind. Radiocarbon dates were provided by the British Museum Research Laboratory and the Science and Engineering Research Council.

We must thank Michael Pitt Rivers for allowing us to excavate at South Lodge Camp and the Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission for permission to work on a scheduled ancient monument. We also received much practical help from the staff of the Rushmore Estate, in particular K. and I. Burt. Thanks are due to Peter Saunders for access to the Pitt Rivers Collection in the Salisbury and South Wiltshire Museum, where Clare Coneybeare and Mark Bowden were of invaluable assistance during this research. In Dorchester Roger Peers provided similar help with material in the Dorset County Museum.

Many people have helped in the preparation of this volume. In Reading a major contribution was made by Mark Bowden, whilst Martin Cook was responsible for many of the illustrations. Julie Carr, Steve Ford and Juliet Foulkes helped to analyse the flintwork from South Lodge Camp, and Averil Culverhouse processed many of the soil samples from the excavation. In Glasgow work was carried out on the drawings by A. McGie, L. McEwan and K. Barrett. We have also benefited from the care taken with the production of this volume at Cambridge University Press.

We are grateful to John Boyden for the frontispiece and to Claire Halpin, Julian Thomas, Nicholas Thomas and the Royal Commission on the Historical Monuments of England for allowing us to include unpublished material in the figure drawings. We also thank the executors of the Virginia Woolf estate and the Hogarth Press for permission to reproduce material from Woolf's Diary.

Many people contributed to the excavations described in this volume, and the successful outcome of this work is largely due to their enthusiasm and good humour and to the excellence of the cooks. Particular responsibilities were taken by John Arnold, Mark Bowden, Steve Cogbill, H. Duncan, Margaret Ehrenberg, Peter Fisher, Steve Ford, Julie Gardiner, K. McAnally, J. McDougall, Barry Mead, Lorraine Mepham, Helen Patterson, Frances Raymond, Kirstie Shedden, Jennie Stopford, Robin Taylor and Julian Thomas. The majority of the workforce was drawn from Glasgow, Leeds and Reading Universities and from the East Dorset Antiquarian Society.

Lastly, we must thank many professional colleagues for their help, support and advice, but we owe a still greater debt to Kathryn and Katherine who will know why.
