

Cambridge University Press

978-0-521-11013-6 - Genocide and International Relations: Changing Patterns in the
Transitions of the Late Modern World

Martin Shaw

Frontmatter

More information

Genocide and International Relations

Genocide and International Relations lays the foundations for a new perspective on genocide in the modern world. Genocide studies have been influenced, negatively as well as positively, by the political and cultural context in which the field has developed. In particular, a narrow vision of comparative studies has been influential in which genocide is viewed mainly as a ‘domestic’ phenomenon of states. This book emphasizes the international context of genocide, seeking to specify more precisely the relationships between genocide and the international system. Shaw aims to re-interpret the classical European context of genocide in this frame, to provide a comprehensive international perspective on Cold War and post-Cold War genocide, and to re-evaluate the key transitions of the end of the Second World War and the end of the Cold War.

MARTIN SHAW is a historical sociologist specializing in global politics, war and genocide. He is Research Professor of International Relations at the Institut Barcelona d’Estudis Internacionals; Professorial Fellow in International Relations and Human Rights at Roehampton University, London; and Emeritus Professor of Sussex University.

Shaw’s books What Is Genocide? (2007) and War and Genocide: Organized Killing in Modern Society (2003) have established him as a major authority in the genocide field. He is the author of several books on war, most recently The New Western Way of War: Risk-Transfer War and Its Crisis in Iraq (2005) and Civil Society and Media in Global Crises: Representing Distant Violence (1996), and on global change, notably Theory of the Global State: Globality as Unfinished Revolution (Cambridge University Press, 2000). His website is martinshaw.org.

Cambridge University Press

978-0-521-11013-6 - Genocide and International Relations: Changing Patterns in the
Transitions of the Late Modern World

Martin Shaw

Frontmatter

More information

Cambridge University Press

978-0-521-11013-6 - Genocide and International Relations: Changing Patterns in the
Transitions of the Late Modern World

Martin Shaw

Frontmatter

More information

Genocide and International Relations

Changing Patterns in the Transitions
of the Late Modern World

MARTIN SHAW

CAMBRIDGE
UNIVERSITY PRESS

Cambridge University Press
978-0-521-11013-6 - Genocide and International Relations: Changing Patterns in the
Transitions of the Late Modern World
Martin Shaw
Frontmatter
More information

CAMBRIDGE
UNIVERSITY PRESS

University Printing House, Cambridge CB2 8BS, United Kingdom

Published in the United States of America by Cambridge University Press, New York

Cambridge University Press is part of the University of Cambridge.

It furthers the University's mission by disseminating knowledge in the pursuit of education, learning and research at the highest international levels of excellence.

www.cambridge.org

Information on this title: www.cambridge.org/9780521125178

© Martin Shaw 2013

This publication is in copyright. Subject to statutory exception and to the provisions of relevant collective licensing agreements, no reproduction of any part may take place without the written permission of Cambridge University Press.

First published 2013

Printed in the United Kingdom by CPI Group Ltd, Croydon CR0 4YY

A catalogue record for this publication is available from the British Library

Library of Congress Cataloguing-in-Publication data

Shaw, Martin, 1947–

Genocide and international relations : changing patterns in the transitions of the late modern world / Martin Shaw.

pages cm

Includes bibliographical references.

ISBN 978-0-521-11013-6 (Hardback) – ISBN 978-0-521-12517-8 (Paperback)

1. Genocide–Research. 2. Genocide–History. 3. Genocide–Political aspects.
4. International relations. I. Title.

HV6322.7.S529 2013

364.15'1–dc23 2013013916

ISBN 978-0-521-11013-6 Hardback

ISBN 978-0-521-12517-8 Paperback

Cambridge University Press has no responsibility for the persistence or accuracy of URLs for external or third-party internet websites referred to in this publication, and does not guarantee that any content on such websites is, or will remain,
accurate or appropriate.

Cambridge University Press

978-0-521-11013-6 - Genocide and International Relations: Changing Patterns in the
Transitions of the Late Modern World

Martin Shaw

Frontmatter

More information

To the memory of my father,
Roy Shaw
1918–2012

Cambridge University Press

978-0-521-11013-6 - Genocide and International Relations: Changing Patterns in the
Transitions of the Late Modern World

Martin Shaw

Frontmatter

More information

Contents

Acknowledgements	page viii
Introduction	1
Part I Perspectives
1 Emancipating genocide research	15
2 Fallacies of the comparative genocide paradigm	28
3 World-historical perspectives: international and colonial	48
Part II Twentieth-century genocide
4 European genocide: inter-imperial crisis and world war	67
5 The 1948 Convention and the transition in genocide	86
6 Cold War, decolonization and post-colonial genocide	98
7 The end of the Cold War and genocide	124
Part III New patterns of genocide
8 Genocide in political and armed conflict: theoretical issues	145
9 Genocide in twenty-first-century regional and global relations	161
10 Conclusions: history and future of genocide	193
Bibliography	207
Index	228

Cambridge University Press

978-0-521-11013-6 - Genocide and International Relations: Changing Patterns in the
Transitions of the Late Modern World

Martin Shaw

Frontmatter

More information

Acknowledgements

This book has been in the making since I completed What Is Genocide? in 2006. The intervening years have been a period of career change. I began them as Professor of International Relations and Politics at the University of Sussex, where I first formulated the project which is brought to completion in this book. By the time I began serious research and writing, I had given up my full-time teaching role at Sussex and become a Research Professor; I am now Emeritus Professor of the University. I subsequently took on roles at two other institutions: as Professorial Fellow in International Relations and Human Rights at the University of Roehampton, London, and as Research Professor of International Relations at the Institut Barcelona d'Estudis Internacionals (IBEI). All three institutions have provided research support and library facilities which have aided me in this project. The research was also financed by a visiting professorship at IBEI in 2010, supported by a grant from the Spanish Ministry of Education.

I have greatly benefited from presentations of parts of this work to seminars at Sussex, Roehampton and IBEI. The (mainly Master's) teaching on war and genocide which I have undertaken at all three institutions has been equally important. My students may not always have realized it, but their courses were for me an opportunity to test the ideas and different ways of presenting them that were maturing in the writing of this book. Students often highlighted problems in the argument and exposition, and sometimes made connections which I had not made. For example, a member of my last group of Sussex undergraduates pointed out that Carl von Clausewitz's famous trinity of government, generals and people as actors of modern war is mirrored in Michael Mann's recent trinity of radical party elites, paramilitaries and core social constituencies as the makers of genocide. I had presented both, but missed the overlap.

I have also gained much from the new global framework for the field which the International Network of Genocide Scholars (INOGS) has

Cambridge University Press

978-0-521-11013-6 - Genocide and International Relations: Changing Patterns in the Transitions of the Late Modern World

Martin Shaw

Frontmatter

More informationAcknowledgements

ix

provided since 2005, and from feedback at its conferences at Sheffield in 2009, where a version of Chapter 2 was presented, and Sussex in 2010. The latter I co-organized with my Sussex colleague Nigel Eltringham, with whom I earlier organized the conference ‘Genocide 60 Years After the Convention’ in Brighton in 2008, where a first version of Chapter 5 was presented. The Journal of Genocide Research (JGR) has been a crucial reference point, and I have benefited greatly from discussions with its current editor, A. Dirk Moses, and his predecessor, Jürgen Zimmerer. I have also enjoyed the many opportunities that its reviews editor, Adam Jones, has provided for me to comment on new publications in the field: several reviews have been drawn on for the argument of this book. I have presented parts of the present work, too, at the Sheffield University Centre for Genocide Research, the Universities of Sydney, Melbourne and Queensland, and at conferences on ‘Partitions in 20th Century Global History’, at the University of Sydney Institute of Social Sciences; ‘Contested Boundaries: Contested Rights’, at Roehampton University; ‘The Holocaust and Other Genocides’, at the Wiener Library, London; ‘New Directions in Genocide Research’, at the European University Institute, Florence; ‘Preventing Genocide’, at the University of Antwerp; ‘The Wannsee Conference – 70 Years After’, at the University of Sussex Centre for German-Jewish Studies; and ‘Armed Conflicts in Comparative Perspective’, at the National University of Ireland, Galway.

An early version of the argument of Chapter 9 was published as ‘Genocide in the Global Age’, in Bryan S. Wilson, ed., The Routledge Handbook of Globalisation Studies, London: Routledge, 2009, pp. 312–27. Part of the argument of Chapter 4 was published in ‘From Comparative to International Genocide Studies: The International Production of Genocide in Twentieth-Century Europe’, European Journal of International Relations, 18(4), 2012, 645–88. A more general statement of the case appeared as ‘Shifting the Foundations of Genocide Research’ in a review forum on Donald Bloxham’s The Holocaust: A Genocide, in the Journal of Genocide Research, 13(2), 2011, 111–16. The project has also had two major spin-offs: the annual War Studies Lecture at King’s College, London, in 2010, published as ‘Britain and Genocide: Historical and Contemporary Parameters of National Responsibility’, Review of International Studies, 37(5), 2011, 2,417–38; and ‘Palestine in an International Historical Perspective on Genocide’, Holy Land Studies, 9(1), 2010, 1–24, which led to

Cambridge University Press

978-0-521-11013-6 - Genocide and International Relations: Changing Patterns in the
Transitions of the Late Modern World

Martin Shaw

Frontmatter

More information

‘The Question of Genocide in Palestine, 1948: A Debate between Martin Shaw and Omer Bartov’, Journal of Genocide Research, 12 (3–4), 2010, 243–59.

Many specific intellectual debts will be apparent in the text. However I must specially thank Andrei Gómez Suárez, whose thesis I supervised during the writing of this book, whose argument stimulated mine, and who commented on the entire manuscript, providing valuable suggestions and corrections. I am also very grateful to Dirk Moses for helpful comments on two chapters.

I could never have written this book without Annabel’s constant support, encouragement and love.