

Cambridge University Press

978-0-521-12584-0 - The Political System Matters: Social Psychology and Voting Behavior
in Sweden and the United States

Donald Granberg and Soren Holmberg

Table of Contents

More information

Contents

Acknowledgements	page ix
1 Social psychological processes in political context	1
System effects on psychological processes	2
Building blocks from social psychology	3
Why Sweden and the United States?	5
The United States and Swedish election studies	7
2 Subjective ideology: left–right and liberal–conservative	10
A brief detour	15
Ideological placements in Sweden and the United States	17
Coherence and stability of self-designated ideology	23
Subjective agreement	23
Unraveling the sources of subjective agreement	27
Assimilation within party and candidate preference groups	30
Subjective ideology and political perception	35
3 Partisan political issues	38
Perception on political issues	38
Subjective agreement and issue voting	40
Four issues	41
Consensus in political perception	41
Subjective agreement	48
Comparing the subjective agreement and issue voting coefficients	50
Issue importance	54
Assimilation within voting groups	55
Perceptions of party positions in the nuclear power referendum	59
The study of political perception	64
4 Mass attitude systems	66
Constraint among issue attitudes	68
Issue attitude differences among voter groups	74
Transitivity of attitudes	82
Constraint varies by political system	86
5 Parties, leaders, and candidates	88
Attitudinal lay of the land	90
Is there a person positivity bias?	94
Patterns of attitudes	97
Linkages between attitudes	103

Cambridge University Press

978-0-521-12584-0 - The Political System Matters: Social Psychology and Voting Behavior
in Sweden and the United States

Donald Granberg and Soren Holmberg

Table of Contents

More information

vi	Contents
	Attitude stability	106
	Attitudes toward the political actors	106
6	Ideology and proximity voting	108
	Proximity voting	110
	Measures of actual similarity, perceived similarity, and attraction	115
	The “slender reed” problem	116
	Modeling similarity and attraction	120
	Similarity and attraction within voting groups	124
	Similarity and attraction across time	128
	A closer look at the centrists	129
	Proximity and attraction	134
7	The preference–expectation link and voting behavior	136
	Bandwagon model	137
	Wishful thinking model	138
	Rational democratic model	138
	Preferences and expectations in United States elections, 1952–1984	139
	Prophecy bends in Sweden	149
	Preference and expectation in 1982 and 1968	150
	Sweden’s nuclear power referendum of 1980	154
	Modeling preference, expectations, and voting behavior	157
	A more realistic model	161
	Interpreting the linkages	162
8	From intention to behavior in election campaigns	166
	The basic intention–behavior relationship	169
	A brief look at demographics	172
	The time dimension	173
	Politically relevant intervening variables	174
	Strength and firmness of intention	179
	Interest and knowledge	181
	An interest–partisan typology	185
	Intentions beyond the mainstream	189
	On the road from intention to behavior	193
9	Prior behavior, recalled behavior, and the prediction of subsequent voting behavior	195
	Studying recalled voting behavior	197
	Six panel studies	198
	Consistency in reporting candidate and party voting	198
	Reporting and recalling whether one voted	204
	Predicting subsequent voting behavior	204
	Recalling prior behavior and subsequent behavior	210
10	Political systems, cognitive–affective processes, and voting behavior	212
	Voters in Sweden and the United States compared	212

Cambridge University Press

978-0-521-12584-0 - The Political System Matters: Social Psychology and Voting Behavior
in Sweden and the United States

Donald Granberg and Soren Holmberg

Table of Contents

More information

Contents	vii
Rationality observed in different political systems	216
Ideology or ideology by proxy?	217
Notes	219
References	238
Index of names	249
Index of subjects	252