I wish to thank several friends and teachers who have read part or all of this book at various stages. Dewey R. Faulkner offered encouragement and specific suggestions as I began. Stephen Parrish and Thomas A. Baylis continued to read as I wrote. Jean H. Hagstrum, who directed my dissertation on another topic, gave this book the same unwavering support throughout. During two summer seminars of the National Endowment for the Humanities in 1979 and 1982, the directors and fellow participants read earlier versions of several chapters. Ronald Paulson, who directed the first seminar, and Anne Mellor, who directed the second, have continued to support my work far beyond the limits of each seminar. Others read individual chapters or queried major issues: Elizabeth Napier, Kathleen Nicholson, Alan Liu, Stephen L. Carr, Marshall Brown, Gene W. Ruoff, Susan J. Wolfson, Cynthia Chase, Reeve Parker, Mary Jacobus, and Alan Bewell. Peter J. Manning has read most of this book more than once. On this and other occasions, I have learned much from his generous critical practice. Janann Stark and Joyce M. Hyde prepared the typescript with intelligence and great good will. I am grateful to The Society for the Humanities at Cornell University and its Director, Jonathan Culler, for a year-long fellowship during which I finished this book and worked on another. Jonathan Culler and the staff of the Society graciously encouraged both projects. Elizabeth Dipple read the entire typescript and offered timely advice as I prepared it for publication.

I would also like to thank Maurico Gonzalez and Timothy Summa, who are responsible for most of the photographic reproductions used in this book. For valuable support and research materials I am grateful to the National Endowment for the Humanities, The University of Texas at San Antonio, Cornell University Library, the Henry E. Huntington Library and Art Gallery, the Humanities Research Center
