CONTRIBUTORS

JEFFREY CLARK is a Tutor in Anthropology at the University of Adelaide. His research interests are focussed on the consequences of Christianity and development for Papua New Guineans, in particular, for the Wiru people of Pangia in the Southern Highlands Province where he has conducted fieldwork since 1980.

DONALD DENOON was born in Scotland, brought up in South Africa, studied at Natal University and Cambridge, taught history in Uganda, Ibadan University, Nigeria, and the University of Papua New Guinea. He is now a Senior Research Fellow at the Australian National University, researching the social history of Papua New Guinea, and this will soon be published by CUP. His general interest is in comparative history.

PATRICIA GRIMSHAW teaches American history and women's history at the University of Melbourne. Her publications include Women's Suffrage in New Zealand. She has co-edited Australian Women: Feminist Perspectives, The Half-Open Door, and Families in Colonial Australia. She has recently completed a full-length study of American mission women in Hawaii.

ANNETTE HAMILTON is Professor of Anthropology and Comparative Sociology at Macquarie University in Sydney. She has carried out extensive fieldwork in North and Central Australia, and archival and library research on the history and sociology of British settler colonies.

MARGARET JOLLY is a Senior Lecturer in Anthropology and Comparative Sociology at Macquarie University in Sydney, where she teaches about Melanesia, Pacific colonialism and women and development. She studied anthropology and history at Sydney University. She is currently writing a book about women and the colonial history of Vanuatu, and will work on a broader comparison of house forms, political hierarchies and domestic life in the Pacific as a Research Fellow in Anthropology, ANU in 1989. She is the author of several papers dealing with the ethnography of Vanuatu and the analysis of gender in Melanesia.

ROGER KEESING is Professor of Anthropology at the Australian National University, and has done field research among the Kwaio of Solomon Islands and in the Indian Himalayas. His books include Cultural Anthropology: A Contemporary Perspective, Kin Groups and Social Structure, Lightning Meets the West Wind: The Malaita Massacre, Kwaio Religion, Elota's Story, Kwaio Dictionary, Kwaio Grammar.

DIANE LANGMORE is a research editor for the Australian Dictionary of Biography, and has lived and worked in Papua New Guinea from 1964 to 1976. Author of Tamata – a King: James Chalmers in New Guinea, her Missionaries in Papua: A Group Portrait is to be published by University of Hawaii Press in 1989.

MARTHA MACINTYRE is a lecturer in the Sociology Department, La Trobe University, Australia. Compiling a bibliography of The Kula inducted her into the ethnography of the Massim area, Papua New Guinea. A teacher and historian before she turned to anthropology, she was educated at the University of Melbourne, Cambridge and the Australian National University. Her fieldwork was carried out on the small island of Tubetube and she has published numerous articles based on her research there.

MERVYN MEGGITT is Professor of Anthropology at Queens College of The City University of New York. He was educated at the University of Sydney. His major works include Desert People: A Study of the Walbiri Aborigines of Central Australia, The Lineage System of the Mae Enga in New Guinea and Studies in Enga History. He has published many journal articles on the Enga over a period of thirty years.

CAROLINE RALSTON a senior lecturer in History at Macquarie University, teaches Pacific, women's and Aboriginal history. Her long-term research project is to write a history of changing patterns of gender relations in Polynesia from pre-contact times to the 1980s. Recently she has jointly edited with Nicholas Thomas, and written the introduction for, a special issue of The Journal of Pacific History, 22 (1987), entitled, Sanctity and Power: Gender in Polynesian History.

NICHOLAS THOMAS is a Research Fellow in Cultural Anthropology at King's College, Cambridge. Apart from field research in the Marquesas he has done archival research in France, Italy, Britain, the United States, Australia and French Polynesia on Polynesian history. His current research interests include exchange, early Fijian societies and theoretical aspects of the relation between history and anthropology.

MICHAEL YOUNG is a Senior Fellow in the Department of Anthropology, Research School of Pacific Studies, at the Australian National University. Born in Manchester, England, he studied anthropology at University College, London, and The Australian National University, and taught at Cambridge. He has done field-work in Papua New Guinea and, most recently, in Vanuatu. His major publications include Fighting with Food, The Ethnography of Malinowski, Magicians of Manumanua, and Malinowski among the Magi: 'The Natives of Mailu'.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The editors thank the Anthropology Department of the Research School of Pacific Studies, The Australian National University, for the institutional and financial support given to this project. Many of the essays originated as papers for the conference 'Christianity, Colonialism and the Family in the Pacific' held in Canberra in December 1983, as part of the workshop on gender relations in the southwest Pacific 1983–1984. Also our special thanks to Marilyn Little for her excellent editing and handling of the proofs of this volume.
