

Contents

List of figures	x
List of tables	xi
Acknowledgements	xiii
Introduction	1
Opening Pandora’s jar	1
Overview of the nature and structure of the book	2
Part I A sketch of the argument	7
1 The limits to growth in organic economies	9
The views of the classical economists	10
The energy constraint	13
Production and reproduction	17
Conclusion	21
2 The transition from an organic to an energy-rich economy	26
Agricultural growth, industrial growth, and transport improvements	28
Manpower productivity in agriculture	33
The energy revolution	36
Conclusion	47
Part II Favourable developments	53
3 Agricultural change and urbanisation	55
Urban growth	58
The consumer revolution	68
The agricultural system	73
The rise in agricultural output	78

viii	Contents
	The London effect 88
	Conclusion 90
4	Energy and transport 91
	The history of energy consumption 91
	Coal production and transport provision 101
	Other improvements in transport facilities 108
	Conclusion 110
5	Occupational structure, aggregate income, and migration 113
	Occupational structure and migration 113
	Occupational change and aggregate income 127
	Aggregate income trends and migration 135
	Conclusion 138
6	Production and reproduction 140
	The components of population change 144
	England in a wider setting: the concomitants of faster population growth 152
	Regional diversity 163
	Conclusion 172
	Retrospect of Part II as a whole 175
	Part III What set England apart from her neighbours 179
7	The timing and nature of change in the industrial revolution 181
	Preliminary considerations 181
	Relative growth rates 187
	The escape from the constraints of an organic economy 193
	The changing character of the growth surge 196
	Why the growth surge continued 198
	A summary of the character and timing of the changes which took place 205
8	Modernisation and the industrial revolution 211
	Introductory comment 211
	England and the Netherlands 216

Contents	ix
The relationship between industrialisation and modernisation	225
National entities and lopsided growth	228
Conclusion	232
Part IV Retrospective	237
9 The industrial revolution and energy	239
The energy revolution	239
Pandora’s jar again	245
Appendix	251
Bibliography	258
Index	268