

Index

- achieved status characteristics
238–239, 246–249
- Advogato.org (study community)
34–36
- affirmative action (AA) legislation 69
- age-based hierarchies 57–58
- agency, and vertical position in market space 96–97, 98
- agency theory 122
- ambiguous environments, importance of status 9–10, 12–13
- anthropology, hierarchies 57
- arbitrary-set hierarchies 57–58
- ascribed status characteristics
238–239, 246–247, 249–257
- asymmetrical in-group bias 60
- authoritarian personality theory 57

- behavioral asymmetry between groups 59–60
- biological need, status as 8
- business awards, signals of high status 205–206

- categorization of technology patents
(USPTO) 157–158,
160–162
 - category positioning effects 182
- CEO compensation
 - excessive 119–121, 145
 - organizational justice 291–292
- CEO competence, implications from tournament theory 145
- Civil Rights Act of 1964 (US) 63
- collaboration within organizations
141–143
- compensation schemes see tournament
theory of compensation
- competence attributions and high
status 9

- competition within organizations
141–143
- conflicting statuses 10
- cross-national differences,
organizational justice 294–295
- cultural context of status 155–183
 - categorization of technology patents
157–158, 160–162
 - category positioning effects 182
 - data and method 162–168
 - discussion (cultural context and actor influence) 180–183
 - factors affecting citation of patents
158–162
 - influence of star scientists 172–180
 - influence on when status matters
155–156
 - influential actors in technology development 156–157, 172–180
 - Matthew effect 159
 - nanotechnology patenting case
156–158
 - results 168–180
 - status dynamics theory and hypotheses 158–162
- cultural differences, organizational justice 294–295

- deference from others, and high status
10
- demographic diversity see race in organizational teams
- discrimination and prejudice 8, 59,
61–62, 64, 65–66
 - value of status studies 338–339
- distributive justice 272–281
 - definition 270

- egalitarianism and social hierarchies
62–63

- emerging communities or organizations, status evaluation 31–32
- equity theory 140, 274–278
- estates (social hierarchy) 4–5
- esteem and status 6
- executive compensation
 - excessive 119–121, 145
 - organizational justice 291–292
- expectancy theory 140
- expectation states theory 7–8, 246
- “facework” and respect for social standing 8
- Gate, Henry Louis 244–245
- gender-based hierarchies 57–58
- group-debilitating behaviors 60
- group expertise assessments 215–233
 - analysis 228–229
 - as status ordering 216–218
 - boundary conditions of the theory 229–230
 - bounded rationality of member assessments 228–229
 - effects of group diversity 224–225
 - effects of group tenure 225
 - equally salient status cues 221–223
 - face-to-face interaction 226–227
 - implications for management of groups 233
 - motivation to be accurate 227–228
 - need to identify member expertise 215–216
 - potential for attribution errors 215–216, 228–229
 - questions for future research 230–233
 - salience of particular status cues 221–228
 - status characteristics theory 216–218
 - status cues (status characteristics) 217–218
 - task novelty 225–226
 - typology of expert status cues 218–219
 - unequally salient status cues 223–228
 - validity and reliability of status cues 219–221
- group positions theory 57
- group value theory 281–284, 288
- hierarchical/structural position, and status 6, 7
- hierarchies see Social Dominance Theory
- high status
 - influence on status evaluations of others 32
 - routes to higher status 11–13
- high-status advantages 8–11
 - ability to exert more influence 10
 - benefits in ambiguous circumstances 9–10
 - competence attributions 9
 - deference from others 10
 - disproportionately higher rewards 9–10
 - fulfillment of a biological need 8
 - generalized effects 9
 - high-performance attribution 9
 - motivations to gain and maintain status 8–11
 - positional goods 9
- honor and status 6, 7
- human relations movement 118
- identity (individual) 304–305
 - self-categorizations 304–305
 - self-concept 304–305
 - threats to 305, 306–307
- identity (market) see market identity; status–identity framework
- identity conflicts 308–310
 - response with multiple display tactics 321–324
- identity displays
 - affirming status and distinctiveness 310–324
 - behavioral displays 311–317
 - displays to affirm distinctiveness 316, 318–320
 - displays to affirm status 316–317, 320–321
 - multiple display tactics 321–324
 - physical marker displays 317–321
 - tactics for affirming identity 310–321
- identity management 304–326

- categorization at multiple levels 309
- conflicts between motives 308–310, 321–324
- more exclusive self-categorizations 306–307
- more inclusive self-categorizations 307
- physical and behavioral displays 310–324
- responses to identity threats 305, 306–307
- status-enhancing versus distinctiveness-enhancing 308–310
- identity threats 305
 - self-categorizations in response to 305, 306–307
- ideological asymmetry in low-status groups 60
- idiosyncrasy effect 293
- influence and high status 10
- influence scholarship, value of status studies 336–337
- innovation scholarship, value of status studies 334–336
- institutional discrimination 59
- interactional justice 288–291
 - definition 271
- inverse Matthew effect 98–99
- justice scholarship, value
 - of status studies 337
 - see also* organizational justice and status
- leadership styles, and decision making 69–70
- legitimacy
 - and status evaluation 30–32
 - and vertical position in market space 97–98
 - new ventures 193, 201–202
- management research
 - early studies of status 1
 - relevance of the role of status 3–4
 - scattered attention to status 1–2
 - value of status studies 333–339
- market identity
 - and status 91–93
 - expectations associated with 91–92
 - see also* market status research; status–identity framework
- market status
 - definition 87
 - importance of 87
 - market identity perspective 87–113
 - status-based model of market competition 87
 - status–identity framework 88–94, 111–113
- market status research 94–110
 - advantages and disadvantages of multiple positions 99–101
 - advantages of vertical positions 95–98
 - agency and vertical position 96–97, 98
 - combining and splitting categories 108–109
 - creating categories 106–108
 - disadvantages of vertical positions 98–99
 - dynamic market spaces 106–110
 - fixed position within the market space 95–101
 - future research 101, 105–106, 110
 - horizontal organizational mobility 104–105
 - inverse Matthew effect 98–99
 - legitimacy and vertical position 97–98
 - market spaces with organizational mobility 101–106
 - perceived quality and vertical position 95–96
 - status–identity framework approach 94–95, 111–112
 - status leakage 98–101
 - vertical organizational mobility 102–104
- Marxist theories 57
- Matthew effect 159
 - inverse 98–99
- money
 - and status 11
 - as motivation see tournament theory of compensation

- motivation
 - money as see tournament theory of compensation
 - non-monetary motives and compensations 130–134
 - striving for status 130–134
 - see also* tournament theory of compensation
- myths which uphold hierarchies 58–59
- nanotechnology development
 - see* cultural context of status
- neoclassical elite theories 57
- network connections
 - and status evaluation 32–34
 - exploitation of structural holes 33–34
 - network information benefits 33–34
- noblesse oblige* effect 292
- Obama, Barack 244–245
- organization research
 - early studies of status 1
 - relevance of the role of status 3–4
 - scattered attention to status 1–2
 - Social Dominance Theory 67–72
 - value of status studies 333–339
- organizational design and
 - organizational objectives 134–136
- organizational justice and status 269–296
 - CEO/executive compensation 291–292
 - connections between justice and status 269–270
 - cross-national differences 294–295
 - cultural differences 294–295
 - definition of distributive justice 270
 - definition of interactional justice 271
 - definition of organizational justice 270–271
 - definition of procedural justice 270–271
 - definition of status 271–272
 - distributive justice 270, 272–281
 - equity theory 274–278
 - group value theory 281–284, 288
 - interactional justice 271, 288–291
 - power distance effects 294–295
 - procedural justice 270–271, 281–288
 - role schema theory 278–281
 - social exchange theory 272–274
 - social identity theory 284–288
 - status and fair punishment 292–294
 - status as an equity input 276–278
 - status as an equity outcome 274–276
- perceived quality
 - and status 12, 89–90
 - and vertical position in market space 95–96
- performance attribution and high status 9
- Peter Principle 125
- positional goods and high status 9
- power and status 7
- power distance effects, organizational justice 294–295
- prejudice and discrimination 8, 59, 61–62, 64, 65–66
 - value of status studies 338–339
- prestige and status 1, 5
- procedural justice 281–288
 - definition 270–271
- psychometric scales, Social Dominance Orientation 66
- punctuated equilibrium 198
- quality perception
 - and status 12, 89–90
 - and vertical position in market space 95–96
- race in organizational teams 238–257
 - achieved status characteristics 238–239, 246–249
 - ascribed status characteristics 238–239, 246–247, 249–257
 - challenge of demographic diversity 241–244
 - demographic characteristics and status 238–239

- demographic diversity and team functioning 238–239
- diffuse and specific status cues 246–247
- effects of status hierarchies 243–244
- non-normative behavior 254–255
- prevalence of racial stereotypes 252–253
- product development team example 240–241, 247–257
- race as a driver of status 244–246
- racial status activation 239–240, 252–257
- significance of race 244–246
- status and demographic characteristics 238–239
- status characteristics theory 246–247
- status cues 246–247
- stereotype-consistent behaviors 252–253
- stereotype-consistent disclosures 253–254
- racial discrimination 8
- racial status activation 239–240, 252–257
 - non-normative behavior 254–255
 - stereotype-consistent behaviors 252–253
 - stereotype-consistent disclosures 253–254
- rank-order payment schemes
 - see* tournament theory of compensation
- reputation and status 90–91
- reputation building, new ventures 193, 202–204
- resource-based view 135
- resource dependency theory 135
- rewards and high status 9–10
- Right-Wing Authoritarianism, and Social Dominance Orientation 65–66
- role schema theory 278–281
- scientific management concept 118
- self-categorizations 304–305
 - more exclusive self-categorizations 306–307
 - more inclusive self-categorizations 307
 - response to identity threats 305, 306–307
- self-concept 304–305
- self-esteem and status 7
- signaling and status 89–90
- social capital and status 7
- social consensus about status 5–6
- social construction of status order 25–27, 28, 29–30
- social cues and status evaluation 29–30
- Social Dominance Orientation (SDO) 60–61, 63–67
 - and Right-Wing Authoritarianism 65–66
 - and unethical behavior 71–72
 - definition 63–64
 - low SDO 63
 - measures 66
 - psychometric scales 66
 - trait versus state 64, 65–66
- Social Dominance Theory 8, 55–80
 - age-based hierarchies 57–58
 - arbitrary-set based hierarchies 57–58
 - asymmetrical in-group bias 60
 - behavioral asymmetry between groups 59–60
 - channels for status effects in organizations 71–72
 - consequences of social hierarchies 61–62
 - definition 56–57
 - effects of affirmative action (AA) legislation 69
 - forces for hierarchy change 62–63
 - future research recommendations 72–79
 - gender-based hierarchies 57–58
 - group-debilitating behaviors 60
 - hierarchy attenuation elements 62–63
 - hierarchy attenuation studies 70–71
 - hierarchy enhancement studies 67–70

- Social Dominance Theory (cont.)
- hierarchy support mechanisms 58–61
 - ideological asymmetry in low-status groups 60
 - individual-level mechanisms 60–61
 - influence of egalitarianism 62–63
 - institutional-level mechanisms 59
 - inter-group relations and conflict in organizations 68–69
 - kinds of social hierarchies 57–58
 - leadership styles and decision making 69–70
 - maintenance and change in social hierarchies 55–56
 - manifestations of social hierarchies 61–62
 - mechanisms which support hierarchies 58–61
 - multi- and cross-level effects 61
 - myths which uphold hierarchies 58–59
 - negative aspects of social hierarchies 61–62
 - organizational behavior research 67–72
 - origins 57
 - positive aspects of social hierarchies 62
 - prejudice and discrimination 61–62
 - Social Dominance Orientation 60–61, 63–67
 - social-group-level mechanisms 59–60
 - theoretical foundations 57
 - understanding effects of social hierarchies 67
 - unethical behavior 71–72
 - social exchange theory 272–274
 - social hierarchies see Social Dominance Theory
 - social identity theory 8, 57, 284–288
 - social roles and status 91–92
 - social science, early studies of status 1
 - stage-gate development process 198
 - stakeholders, relationships with new ventures 200–205
 - status
 - and esteem 6
 - and hierarchical/structural position 6, 7
 - and honor 6, 7
 - and money 11
 - and perception of quality 12, 89–90
 - and power 7
 - and prestige 1, 5
 - and self-esteem 7
 - and social capital 7
 - as a biological need 8
 - competing views of what it is 4–8
 - early studies 1
 - effects of inconsistent status roles 10
 - importance to individuals and organizations 26–27
 - in organization and management research 1–2
 - proposed definition 6
 - range of theoretical perspectives 7–8
 - relevance for organization and management research 3–4
 - social consensus about 5–6
 - subjective and objective views 5–6
 - status benefits 8–11
 - ability to exert more influence 10
 - benefits in ambiguous circumstances 9–10
 - competence attributions 9
 - deference from others 10
 - disproportionately higher rewards 9–10
 - fulfillment of a biological need 8
 - generalized effects 9
 - high-performance attribution 9
 - motivations to gain and maintain status 8–11
 - positional goods 9
 - status building, new ventures
 - see* venture launch and growth
 - status characteristics theory 216–218, 246–247
 - achieved status characteristics 238–239, 246–249
 - ascribed status characteristics 238–239, 246–247, 249–257
 - diffuse and specific status cues 246–247

- status cues (status characteristics)
 - 217–218
 - attributes and behaviors dimension 218–219
 - bounded rationality of group member assessments 228–229
 - diffuse and specific status cues 217–219, 246–247
 - salience of particular status cues 221–228
 - typology of expert status cues 218–219
 - validity and reliability 219–221
- status differences
 - effects on interactions 7–8
 - how they arise 11–13
- status evaluation divergence
 - and status instability 25–26
 - group-level studies 26
 - importance of status 26–27
- status evaluation divergence study 27–48
 - Advogato.org (study community) 34–36
 - conclusion 47–48
 - data 36–39
 - determinants of a stable status system 47–48
 - determinants of status instability 28–34
 - discussion of influential factors 43–44
 - emerging communities or organizations 31–32
 - exploitation of structural holes 33–34
 - future studies 46–47
 - implications for study of status formation 44–46
 - influence of perceived uncertainty 29–34, 43, 45
 - legitimacy and evaluation norms 30–32
 - method 34–39
 - models 39
 - multiple mechanisms in status formation 43–44, 47
 - network connections 32–34
 - network information benefits 33–34
 - opinions of high-status actors 32
 - results 39–40
 - social construction perspective 28, 29–30
 - social cues and uncertainty 29–30
 - status-building process 27–28
 - structural perspective 32–34
 - theory and hypotheses 28–34
 - status evaluation norms 30–32
 - status formation
 - multiple mechanisms 43–44, 47
 - studies 26–27
 - status–identity framework 88–94, 111–113
 - expectations associated with market identity 91–92
 - generalization to other contexts 112–113
 - horizontal and vertical dimensions 92–93
 - illustration 93–94
 - limitations and further development 111–112
 - methodological approach 88–89
 - philosophical approach 88
 - status and market identity 91–93
 - status and perceived quality 89–90
 - status and reputation 90–91
 - status and signaling 89–90
 - status and social roles 91–92
 - status as a position in a social system 91–93
 - status instability
 - determinants 28–34
 - and status evaluation divergence 25–26
 - and uncertainty 25–26
 - status leakage 98–101
 - status liability effect 293
 - status loss
 - drive to avoid 8
 - effects of 10
 - status mobility, and status evaluation divergence 25–26
 - status-object displays 12
 - status stability, determinants of a stable status system 47–48
 - stereotypes 60, 69 see also race in organizational teams

- stock-market illegitimacy discount 92, 99–100
- strategic self-verification 310
- strategy scholarship, value of status studies 333–334
- structural approach to status formation 32–34
- structural holes in networks 33–34
- teams see group expertise assessments; race in organizational teams
- tournament theory of compensation 118–145
 - applying insights from status research 130–145
 - attempts to integrate status 128–130
 - comparison with absolute performance measures 119
 - competition versus collaboration 141–143
 - criticisms and limitations 119–121, 123–130
 - development of compensation schemes 118
 - different forms of status hierarchies 134–136
 - effects of performance feedback 140
 - excessive CEO/executive compensation 119–121, 145
 - hidden costs and ineffectiveness 143–145
 - ideas and concept 119
 - impediments to efficiency of tournaments 137–140
 - implications about CEO competence 145
 - lack of attention from social science 125–128
 - motivational effects of money 118
 - non-monetary motives and compensations 130–134
 - organizational design and organizational objectives 134–136
 - overlap with status research 120–121, 125–128
 - oversimplification criticism 124–125
 - performance impacts 141–143
 - prediction of motivational effects 122–123
 - promotion-based compensation 122–123
 - rationale for rank-order payment schemes 122–123
 - relative performance in rank order 119
 - sources of bias in tournament schemes 137–140
 - striving for status 130–134
- transaction cost theory 135
- two-value model of political orientation 57
- uncertainty, and status instability 25–26, 29–34, 43, 45
- unethical behavior, Social Dominance Orientation 71–72
- value of status studies 333–343
 - enriching organization and management theories 333–339
 - influence scholarship 336–337
 - innovation scholarship 334–336
 - justice scholarship 337
 - practical implications of status 342–343
 - strategy scholarship 333–334
 - theories of workplace discrimination 338–339
 - understanding status in organizations 340–342
- venture launch and growth 191–207
 - awards as signals of high status 205–206
 - beginning selling 199
 - challenges faced by new ventures 191
 - development of the product/service offering 199
 - funding the development effort 199
 - legitimacy 193, 201–202
 - liability of newness 191
 - model of new venture growth 194–200
 - order effects 205
 - proof of concept stage 198–199

Index

353

- reputation 193, 202–204
- stages of growth for new ventures
194–200
- stakeholder relationships 200–205
- status 193–194
- status-building mechanisms
200–205
- status-building process 191–192,
204–205
- status-building theory 192–194
- Weber, Max 5, 11
- Woods, Tiger 245–246
- workplace discrimination
- value of status studies 338–339
see also prejudice and discrimination; race in organizational teams