Acknowledgements

I wish to acknowledge the generous help I have received from many people in the production of this book. First amongst these are Peter Field and Doreen Cadwallader of the Letchworth Museum and the First Garden City Museum at Letchworth, who have, for many years, allowed me access to their collection of Barry Parker's papers and drawings. Dean Gerald McCue and Professor Henry Cobb of the Graduate School of Design at Harvard University helped me to travel to America to work on The Craftsman and contemporary American journals at the Loeb Library and the New England Deposit Library at Cambridge, Massachusetts. In Cambridge, England, I have benefited over the years from conversations with my colleagues Nicholas Bullock and David Handlin (now at Harvard), and from the work of all of the students in the Department of Architecture who have written dissertations on Arts and Crafts and Garden City topics. I should also like to thank the many present owners of Parker and Unwin's houses who have, without exception, allowed me access to their homes.

The majority of the illustrations in the book are reproduced from original drawings and photographs held at the First Garden City Museum at Letchworth. These are 1, 2, 3, 7, 8, 10, 13, 14, 18, 19, 20, 21, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 29, 30, 32, 34, 36, 37, 39, 43, 44, 45, 48, 49, 52, 53, 54, 58, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 81, 86, 90, 91, 93, 95, 96, 97, 99, 104. Illustrations 5, 17, and 22 are reproduced from Parker and Unwin's collection of essays The Art of Building a Home published in 1901 by Longmans, Green and Co. Illustration 11 is from Raymond Unwin's Town Planning in Practice, published in 1909 by T. Fisher Unwin. Illustration 4 is from a drawing in the collection of the British Architectural Library's Drawings Collection. Illustrations 51 and 55 are modern photographs by the author and all other illustrations are redrawn by the author from the drawings which illustrated Parker's essays as they first appeared in The Craftsman

Cambridge, 1985
