ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I am indebted to many friends and colleagues for their help and encouragement. Thanks are due foremost to Professor A. T. Hatto whose contributions are past recounting. His interest and moral support have been constant since I first began the study in 1970 as a Ph.D. thesis under his tutelage at Queen Mary College, University of London. Professor Kenneth Northcott of the University of Chicago first formed my approach to medieval literature. Professor C. S. Jaeger of Bryn Mawr College kindly read and criticised the manuscript in its early state. His comments and those of Professor M. O'C. Walshe were especially helpful.

Through the various stages of research and writing I have received assistance from several institutions. Generous support from the American Association of University Women and the Deutscher Akademischer Austauschdienst made possible a year abroad in 1978–9. The Portland State University Foundation provided a subvention to assist with publication costs. I am particularly grateful to the libraries of Queen Mary College, the Warburg Institute, the Germanic Institute and Senate House of the University of London, to the British Library, and the Portland State University Library. My greatest debt is to my husband Peter who has never hesitated in his encouragement and willingness to read yet another version.
