ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This book is based upon a doctoral dissertation approved by the University of Cambridge in 1965.

I have several debts which it is a pleasure to acknowledge: to the Master and Fellows of Churchill College who, by electing me to the College Research Studentship in 1963, enabled me to stay in Cambridge and complete my work; to Dr A. C. Ewing whose support made possible my return to philosophy after several years in less congenial fields, and with whom I have discussed, always with profit to myself, most of the points in the book; to Professor R. B. Braithwaite who has kindly discussed several questions with me and saved me from at least one howler; to Mrs Philippa Foot whose criticism of my argument at crucial places has helped me, I hope, to improve it; and to Mr Alan Dutton whose philosophical companionship has been invaluable over a number of years.

My debt to my wife is of a different kind: it is quite certain that without her sustaining influence I should have had no opportunity to acknowledge any debts.
