PREFACE

THIS book, which is now published by the generosity of the Cambridge University Press, is substantially the same as the dissertation submitted by myself for a Ph.D. degree at Cambridge in August 1950.

Professor Francis Wormald supervised me throughout the writing of this work, and I am more than grateful to him for his unremitting guidance and encouragement. If there is any value at all in this book, it is my sincere wish that he will accept it as a tribute to the stimulus of his own teaching.

To Dr Hanns Swarzenski, whose erudition is equalled only by his generosity, I am indebted for sparing time on his visits to England to discuss various problems, and for making many valuable suggestions which I have tried to acknowledge in the text. I am also grateful to him for reading the typescript with a critical eye. Dr C. H. Talbot has given me help and information on Cistercian manuscripts, which is acknowledged in Chapter VIII, and Dr Hugo Buchthal has been good enough to answer questions on matters Byzantine. Professor R. A. B. Mynors has been extremely kind in correcting errors and infelicities in the typescript, and I am also grateful to Professor M. D. Knowles and to Professor T. S. R. Boase for pointing out mistakes and smoothing out imperfections.

I should like to thank the many librarians in England and France who have given me access to large numbers of manuscripts, often at inconvenient times. In particular, I have had to make heavy demands on the time and patience of Mr H. M. Adams, librarian of Trinity College, Cambridge, where most of my material is to be found; his unfailing courtesy and assistance have been more than any student should expect.

The identifications of Canterbury manuscripts are largely, though not wholly, based on those given by Mr Neil Ker in his Medieval Libraries of Great Britain. These in turn owe much to that great scholar Dr M. R. James; all students of the Middle Ages owe him some debt; without his work this book on Canterbury illumination could not even have been attempted.

C. R. DODWELL
