THE AUDIENCE FOR IRISH SPECTACLE

Employing previously unexamined archival material, Paige Reynolds reconstructs five large-scale public events staged in early twentieth-century Ireland: the riotous premiere of J. M. Synge's The Playboy of the Western World in 1907; the events of Dublin Suffrage Week, including the Irish premiere of Ibsen's Rosmersholm, in 1913; the funeral processions of the playwright and Lord Mayor of Cork Terence MacSwiney in 1920; the sporting and arts competitions of the Tailteann Games in 1924; and the organized protests accompanying the premiere of Sean O'Casey's The Plough and the Stars in 1926. The book provides attentive readings of the literature and theatre famously produced in tandem with these events, as well as introducing surprising texts that made valuable contributions to Irish national theatre. This detailed account revises pessimistic explanations of twentieth-century mass politics and crowd dynamics by presenting a more sympathetic account of national communities and national sentiment.

PAIGE REYNOLDS is an Associate Professor in the English department of The College of the Holy Cross in Worcester, Massachusetts. She has published and lectured on Irish literature and theatre, as well as on modernism and on the audiences for literary texts, theatre, film, and sport. Her work has appeared in Twentieth Century Literature, Modernism/Modernity, and Irish University Review, among other publications, and she was awarded the 2003 Roger McHugh Award for outstanding learned essay in New Hibernia Review.

In the forthcoming pages, I will argue that engaged audiences help to make creative work better. That claim has certainly proven true in the production of this book.

This project began with the support of Bill Brown, whose judicious readings were immeasurably encouraging, and that of Lisa Ruddick, who as friend and mentor not only improved this book, but also shared the intellectual and emotional tools that helped me to find an enriching place in the academy. Other colleagues whom I first encountered at the University of Chicago – including Jim Chandler, Paul Gilmore, Aeron Hunt, Margaret Keller, Mary Morley Cohen, Trish Loughran, Jamil Mustafa, Mary Jane Nigro Reis, Stuart Sherman, Lynn Voskuil, and Gavin Witt – strengthened its foundations. Mark Morrisson and Laura Reed-Morrisson offered critical insights and kindness at every stage. Financial support for early research and writing came from Marcia Tillotson Travel Grants, a Mellon Summer Research Grant, and the William and Ira Rosenberg Fellowship.

The College of the Holy Cross provided generous research funding through the Charles and Rosanna Batchelor (Ford) Foundation Grant and grants from the Committee on Research and Publications. The Edward F. Callahan Irish Studies Support Fund, supported by Peter Merrigan, subsidized the costs for images reproduced in this book. As well, Holy Cross has gifted me with extraordinary colleagues too many to name here. Special thanks are due to those in the English department who read or commented on portions of the manuscript: Pat Bizzell, Christy Coch, Shawn Maurer, Jim Miracky, and Jonathan Mulrooney. I would also like to thank my students, who regularly confirm for me the power and pleasures of studying literature and theatre.

The fellowship and scholarship of those affiliated with the Boston College Irish Studies Program played a crucial role in this project. In particular, I thank Kate Costello-Sullivan, Ruth-Ann Harris, Marjorie Howes, Phil O’Leary, Rob Savage, and Jim Smith for their close consideration of my work. I also owe a profound debt of gratitude to Margaret Kelleher and Claire Connolly, and to Margot Backus, Helen Burke, Liz Cullingford, Susan Harris, Sarah McKibben, and Mary Trotter. Each of these women embodies an awe-inspiring mix of intelligence, diligence, and good humor. Their fingerprints are all over my work. Others have pointed me to gems in the archives, answered queries, and generally encouraged this book’s development in ways large and small, including Anne Fogarty, Dennis Huston, Brit Smith, Andrew Sofer, Lisa Fluet, Eileen O’Halloran, Paul O’Donovan, Nick Daly, Stephanie Rains, Ray Ryan, Cheryl Herr, Jim Rogers, Adrian Frazier, Nicholas Grene, Margaret Ward, Louise Ryan, Clare Hutton, Nicholas Allen, Ben Levitas, Dorothy Chansky, Peter Hart, Marcus de Burca, Mike Cronin, Larry Ryder, Cyril White, and Tim Carey. At Cambridge University Press, I thank my editor Vicki Cooper and her assistant Becky Jones, as well as Jo Breeze, Sue Dickinson, and the two manuscript readers who offered a terrific balance of interest and inquiry.

At each of the archives I eagerly pillaged, I was rewarded with exceptional support and information. For aid and permission to publish material, I thank the Board of the National Library of Ireland, and the Keeper of Manuscripts, Gerard Lyne; the National Archives of Ireland and the Director of the National Archives; the UCD Archives, University College Dublin, and its director Seamus Helferty and archivist Kate Manning; the Abbey Theatre; the Henry W. and Albert A. Berg Collection of English and American Literature, New York Public Library; the Cornell Joyce Collection, Division of Rare and Manuscript Collections, Carl A. Kroch Library, Cornell University, Ithaca, New York; the Charles Deering McCormick Library of Special Collections, Northwestern University, Evanston, Illinois; the archives of the GAA Museum, Croke Park and Museum Assistant Siobhán Byrne.

Portions of Chapter 2 appeared as “The First Playboy” in Playboys of the Western World: Production Histories, edited by Adrian Frazier (Dublin: Carysfort Press, 2004), pp. 13–28, and are reprinted with permission from Carysfort Press; portions of Chapter 3 appeared as “Modernist Martyrdom: The Funerals of Terence MacSwiney” in Modernism/Modernity 9:4 (2002), pp. 535–59, and are reprinted with permission of The Johns Hopkins University Press; a fragment of Chapter 1 appeared in “Theatre Audiences, Reading Publics, and the Abbey’s Little Magazines” New Hibernia Review 7:4 (Winter 2003), pp. 63–84, and is reprinted with permission from the Center for Irish Studies, University of St. Thomas, Minneapolis, Minnesota; and a portion of Chapter 3 appears in Irish Women and the Vote: Becoming Citizens, ed. Louise Ryan and Margaret Ward (Dublin: Irish Academic Press, 2007) 60–74, and is reprinted with permission from Irish Academic Press.

My brother, Grahm Reynolds, and friends and family including Danelle Barksdale, Dave Chustz, Gia Elsevier, Amy Jackson, Carroll Joynes, Arlene and Tom Klausen, Tom Landy and Phillip Petrie, Kelly Miller, Stacie Nessa, and Zampa Pereira have patiently endured the solipsism that a project of this scale generates and nurses. Our new son Asher eased the final revision process with frequent strolls around town – and by finally sleeping through the night.

This book is dedicated to my mother, Dee Reynolds, who sparked my enthusiasm for books and theatre and inspires me with her avid curiosity. And to my husband, Mario Pereira. He vastly improved this book, an effect he has on every aspect of my life.
