Combat and Morale in the North African Campaign

Military professionals and theorists have long understood the relevance of morale in war. Montgomery, the victor at El Alamein, said, following the battle, that ‘the more fighting I see, the more I am convinced that the big thing in war is morale’. Jonathan Fennell, in examining the North African campaign through the lens of morale, challenges conventional explanations for Allied success in one of the most important and controversial campaigns in British and Commonwealth history. He introduces new sources, notably censorship summaries of soldiers’ mail, and an innovative methodology that assesses troop morale not only on the evidence of personal observations and official reports but also on contemporaneously recorded rates of psychological breakdown, sickness, desertion and surrender. He shows for the first time that a major morale crisis and stunning recovery decisively affected Eighth Army’s performance during the critical battles on the Gazala and El Alamein lines in 1942.

JONATHAN FENNELL is Lecturer in Defence Studies with King’s College London, at the Airmen’s Command Squadron, Royal Air Force, Halton.

The aim of this new series is to publish outstanding works of research on warfare throughout the ages and throughout the world. Books in the series will take a broad approach to military history, examining war in all its military, strategic, political and economic aspects. The series is intended to complement Studies in the Social and Cultural History of Modern Warfare by focusing on the 'hard' military history of armies, tactics, strategy and warfare. Books in the series will consist mainly of single author works – academically vigorous and groundbreaking – which will be accessible to both academics and the interested general reader.

A list of titles in the series can be found at:

I was sitting at a desk in the Australian War Memorial in Canberra when I was handed the first file of a series of documents that in many ways forms the spine of the research on which this book is based. I had the official censorship summaries of the soldiers' mail for Middle East Command in my hands. Because there are no copies of these files in UK archives, as far as I know I was the first historian tracing the morale of British soldiers in the desert to have the opportunity to study them.

The journey that brought me to this exciting moment and the work of writing this book have been assisted by many people, not all of whom I can mention here.

Above all, I cannot thank Professor Hew Strachan enough for his continuous help and guidance and for all the support and encouragement he has given me, not only as a research student under his supervision at Oxford but also through the long germination of this book and in my lecturing career.

I owe a special debt of gratitude to Dr Peter Stanley, who kindly pointed me in the right direction in the archives in Australia and also lent me a 'moveable archive' of material that he had used for his book Alamein: The Australian Story.

I also thank Professor Peter Dennis, Dr Ian McGibbon and John Crawford, who all took the time to meet me in Australia and New Zealand and discuss matters relating to their countries' forces in the desert.

I also owe a debt of gratitude to Dr Niall Barr for discussing my research with me and lending me material from his own work on Pendulum of War. I would like to thank Professor Gary Sheffield for contributing to the direction of this book and Dr Jeremy Crag and Dr Ben Shephard for taking the time to talk to me and pointing out many avenues of research I could follow.

Dr Declan Downey and Dr William Mulligan, who took me under their wings at University College Dublin as an undergraduate, have never failed to support and advise me over the years. My college supervisor at Pembroke College, Oxford, Dr Adrian Gregory, always added insights to the direction of my research.

Michael Watson, Chloe Howell, Joanna Breeze, Angela Turnbull and Hannah Ellis-Jones at Cambridge University Press could not have been more supportive in helping me finish off this book while juggling the commitments of beginning an academic career.

My colleagues at King's College London, the Royal Air Force College at Cranwell, the Airmen's Command Squadron at Halton, and in particular Dr Joel Hayward, have been very understanding and supportive and have facilitated me in every way possible during the final stages of completing the manuscript for this book.

Furthermore, without the patient help and guidance of many librarians and archivists this book could never have been completed. Special thanks are due to all those who helped and guided me at the National Archives, the Imperial War Museum, the Liddell Hart Centre for Military Archives, the Australian War Memorial, Archives Australia, the National Archives of New Zealand, the Alexander Turnbull Library and the South African Military Archives Depot.

I am grateful to Miranda Kaufmann for lending me Hugh Mainwaring's unpublished memoirs and Alexander Leithead for reading through a draft of the unfinished manuscript.

I would also like to thank my Anna, who has brought so much happiness and love into my life, and who has provided unending support during the critical phases of this project.

Finally I would like to thank my mother and father. They have offered unbelievable love and support throughout the process of writing this book and proof-read uncountable drafts. I cannot imagine having better or more wonderful parents.
