

Contents

Acknowledgements	page xi
A note on referencing	xiii
 Part I Introduction
1 What is strategy?	3
Art of war or science of war, and technical definitions of ‘strategy’	3
The articulation of different dimensions of Strategy	9
What is this book examining?	29
 Part II Long-term constants
2 Warfare and mindsets from Antiquity to the Middle Ages	39
Technology and warfare	39
Causes, aims and ethics of war from the Roman Empire to the late Middle Ages	42
3 Warfare and mindsets in early modern Europe	54
Causes, aims and practice of war in early modern Europe	54
The ethics of war in early modern Europe	64
4 Themes in early thinking about Strategy	76
Sieges and static defences from Troy to Basra	76
Feudal levies, mercenaries or militia?	82
Battle avoidance or decisive battles?	89
Limited and unlimited wars	97
The enduring quest for eternal principles governing warfare	100
 Part III The Napoleonic paradigm and Total War
5 The age and mindset of the Napoleonic paradigm	113
Causes of wars, world-views and war aims 1792–1914	113
The influence of Social Darwinism and racism	123
	 vii

viii		Contents
6	The Napoleonic paradigm transformed: from total mobilisation to total war The quest for total victory The centrality of the battle Annihilation of the enemy The universal cult of the offensive Total mobilisation or professional military elites?	137 139 142 145 146 152
7	Challenges to the Napoleonic paradigm versus the culmination of Total War Mars mechanised: the Napoleonic paradigm versus technological innovation The dissenters: Corbett's limited wars and Jaurès's defensive army Lessons of the First World War Strategy responses to the First World War The Second World War: culmination of Total War	171 171 176 179 181 194
	Part IV Naval and maritime Strategy
8	Long-term trends and early maritime Strategy Strategy on land, at sea and in the air Writing in the age of oar and sail	201 201 207
9	The age of steam to the First World War The 'Anglo-Saxon' writers in the age of steam French naval theorists in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries Germany before the First World War Conclusions	216 216 233 245 247
10	The World Wars and their lessons for maritime Strategists The First World War British lessons French lessons The second-tier powers US lessons from the Second World War Conclusions	248 248 250 256 260 266 267
11	Maritime Strategy in the nuclear age The Cold War framework Multiple roles for navies	268 268 276

Contents	ix
Strategies for second-tier powers	286
Change of world-views and principles in conducting international affairs	290
Conclusions	291
Part V Air power and nuclear Strategy
12 War in the third dimension	297
Child and grandchild of naval Strategy	297
The beginnings of air power	298
13 Four schools of air power	313
The strategic or city bombing school	314
The military targets school: denial	336
The leadership targeting school: decapitation	342
The political signalling school: games theories	345
Conclusions	350
14 Nuclear Strategy	351
Targets	351
Deterrence	357
Nuclear war-fighting Strategy	366
War taken to its absurd extreme	382
Part VI Asymmetric or 'small' wars
15 From partisan warfare to people's war	387
Two meanings of 'small war'	387
The mosquito and the lion: tactics	397
Hearts and minds I	414
Defence in depth	416
16 Counterinsurgency	419
The legal status of insurgents	419
Brutal repression	422
Hearts and minds II	427
Conclusions	436
Part VII The quest for new paradigms after the World Wars
17 Wars without victories, victories without peace	441
The First World War as turning point?	441

x		Contents
	Causes, conduct and ethics of wars since 1945	444
	The relinquishment of the Napoleonic paradigm	453
	The return of limited wars	456
	Coercion	463
	Defensive defence and the relinquishment of victory	467
18	No end of history: the dialectic continues	472
	The Napoleonic paradigm strikes back: Summers's Clausewitzian critique	472
	Major war since 1945	477
	The return of small wars	480
	Future developments	486
19	Epilogue: Strategy-making versus bureaucratic politics	488
	Policy and Strategy in practice	488
	The frailty of human logic	498
20	Summaries and conclusions	500
	Bibliography	506
	Index	571