

CONTENTS

|   |                  |
|---|------------------|
| List of tables  | page viii |
| Preface   | ix               |
|   |                  |
| 1 The enquiry: scope, method, texts              |                  |
| The enquiry   | 1                |
| Criteria: skills in English                             | 4                |
| Texts   | 6                |
| Textual conventions                                     | 10               |
|   |                  |
| 2 Reading, spelling, pronunciation: the elements |                  |
| Introduction  | 14               |
| Pupils and teachers at work                             | 16               |
| Reading- and spelling-skills                            | 22               |
| The letters of the alphabet                             | 25               |
| Name, sound and power                                   | 32               |
| Name and sound  | 32               |
| Sound and power   | 36               |
| Naming consonants                                       | 41               |
| The CV pattern  | 41               |
| The VC pattern  | 43               |
| The mixed pattern                                       | 45               |
| Names of particular letters                             | 48               |
| The sounds of the letters                               | 52               |
| Teaching the alphabet                                   | 58               |
| Syllables   | 72               |
| Proper beginnings and endings                           | 75               |
| The division of syllables                               | 77               |
|   |                  |
| 3 Reading, spelling, pronunciation: the skills   |                  |
| Kinds of spelling                                       | 90               |
| Spelling-lists  | 96               |
| Learning the monosyllables                              | 99               |
| After the monosyllables                                 | 103              |

|          |  |     |
|----------|--|-----|
| vi       | Contents  |     |
|          | Rules for spelling   | 108 |
|          | Two eighteenth-century schemes of work                       | 109 |
|          | Spelling and reading   | 111 |
|          | Spelling before reading                                      | 113 |
|          | Reading before spelling                                      | 115 |
|          | Reading with spelling  | 116 |
|          | Reading without spelling: context and wholeness              | 117 |
|          | The rejection of context                                     | 125 |
|          | Dictation  | 127 |
|          | From the letter to the word: a summary                       | 130 |
| 4 | Interpretation: literature presented                  |     |
|          | The teaching of literature: before 1700                      | 135 |
|          | Indirect literary influences                                 | 135 |
|          | Direct literary influences                                   | 148 |
|          | The teaching of literature: eighteenth century, to 1770      | 159 |
|          | Three writers of verse for children                          | 167 |
|          | Anthologies  | 169 |
| 5 | Interpretation: literature taught                     |     |
|          | The teaching of literature: eighteenth century, from 1770    | 183 |
|          | Anthologies  | 185 |
|          | Analysis of the anthologies, 1771–1801                       | 195 |
|          | Teachers' comments on English reading, 1698–1801             | 200 |
|          | The teaching of literature: nineteenth century               | 212 |
|          | Literary history   | 218 |
|          | Anthologies  | 219 |
|          | Analysis of the anthologies, 1802–1870                       | 223 |
|          | Readers  | 238 |
|          | Imagination, understanding, memory                           | 247 |
|          | Authors, set books and examinations                          | 261 |
|          | J.W. Hales and E.A. Abbott                                   | 265 |
| 6 | Expression and performance                            |     |
|          | The skills   | 268 |
|          | Individual writers: sixteenth and seventeenth centuries      | 270 |
|          | Some eighteenth- and nineteenth-century teaching-methods | 278 |
|          | Elocution  | 286 |

| Contents                                      | vii |
|--|-----|
| Talking, debating, making speeches and reading aloud | 290 |
| Dramatic work  | 297 |
| Written expression                                   | 303 |
| 7 Linguistic control                          |     |
| Until the end of the eighteenth century              | 317 |
| English grammar and Latin grammar                    | 317 |
| What the pupils were expected to learn               | 320 |
| Attempts at reform                                   | 342 |
| The nineteenth century                               | 346 |
| Ordinary grammars and established methods            | 346 |
| Exercises  | 350 |
| Vocabulary, etymology and history of the language    | 354 |
| Innovation and development                           | 359 |
| 8 English: the development of a subject       |     |
| The term 'English'                                   | 372 |
| An alliance of components                            | 378 |
| Change and progress                                  | 383 |
|  | 386 |
| Abbreviations  |     |
| Bibliography 1                                       | 387 |
| British texts recorded and consulted                 |     |
| Bibliography 2                                       | 605 |
| British ABCs and alphabet books consulted            |     |
| Bibliography 3                                       | 607 |
| American texts consulted                             |     |
| Bibliography 4                                       | 621 |
| Modern works consulted                               |     |
| Index  | 631 |