ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

I have incurred many debts while writing this book. An Arnold L. and Lois S. Graves Award and Caltech's Division of Humanities and Social Sciences gave me the time to begin my research. I would like to thank Roger Noll, then chairman of the division, for arranging a supplement to the Graves Award. The wonderful resources of the Huntington Library and the cooperation of its staff greatly facilitated my work. For permission to reprint the sections of chapters 2 and 6 which originally appeared in their pages I thank the editors of English Literary Renaissance. My editors at Cambridge University Press were very helpful; Andrew Brown offered me shrewd advice, and Eric Van Tassel meticulously and promptly edited the manuscript. Edith Huang of Caltech's Computer Support Services provided indispensable assistance while I was typesetting the book.

Thomas M. Greene encouraged me, at a time when I sorely needed encouragement, to stay with my first attempts at understanding Renaissance funeral poetry, and his careful reading of the first draft of the manuscript clarified the direction it was taking. I am deeply grateful to him for his support of all of my work since my days as a graduate student. Stephen Marmer helped me learn most of what I know about mourning. The advice, criticism, and friendship of Jerome McGann sustained me throughout the revision of the manuscript. I would also like to thank John Benton, Louis Breger, Ronald Bush, Margaret Ferguson, David Glidden, Daniel Javitch, W. T. Jones, and Annette Smith for their comments on various drafts. My wife, Celeste Moore, improved every draft, but that is not the only reason I dedicate the book to her.
