Acknowledgements

Part of the preparation of this book was made possible by a Rackham Research Grant from the University of Michigan, and I wish to express gratitude to the many librarians who have given generous assistance, especially the Librarians of the Shakespeare Centre, Stratford-upon-Avon (Miss Eileen Robinson), the British Theatre Association (formerly the British Drama League), the British Library and its Colindale Newspaper Collection. Some of my material appeared in another form in Modern Language Quarterly with the title 'Elizabethan Open Staging: William Poel to Tyrone Guthrie' and I wish to thank the Editor for his kind permission to reprint. My sincere thanks also go to particular colleagues and friends who in various capacities have assisted with contributions or comments or both: Claribel Baird, Michael Black, B. G. Cross, Attilio Favorini, Miriam Gilbert, G. B. Harrison, W. P. Halstead and Rita Huber. My debt to the many excellent accounts of modern Shakespeare production by distinguished players like A. C. Sprague, J. C. Trewin and Norman Marshall will be apparent. The fundamental debt is to all those amateur and professional players who have, for whatever reason and however well or badly, made their contribution to the total of our experience of Shakespeare over the years.
