

Cambridge University Press

978-0-521-27409-8 - Sociology, Ethnomethodology, and Experience: A Phenomenological Critique

Mary F. Rogers

Table of Contents

More information

Contents

Preface	page ix
Introduction	1
1 The struggle toward critical unity in sociology: a phenomenological resolution?	5
Sociology and the Crises	6
Phenomenology and sociology	12
Phenomenological sociology: a preliminary illustration	15
2 Consciousness and constitution	22
Intentionality, givenness, and horizon: the structure of consciousness	23
Time-consciousness, typification, and identity	25
Constitution	27
3 Experience, meaning, and the self	32
Experience and consciousness	32
Lived experience and meaning	36
Meaning and the self	42
4 The life-world	47
Elements of the life-world	49
The natural attitude	52
The stock of knowledge and common sense	54
Social action	59
The structure of the life-world	63
	vii

Cambridge University Press

978-0-521-27409-8 - Sociology, Ethnomethodology, and Experience: A Phenomenological Critique

Mary F. Rogers

Table of Contents

More information

viii	Contents
5	Phenomenological methods	67
	Epochē and eidetic reduction	70
	The phenomenological reduction	73
	Evidence and empiricism	76
6	Ethnomethodology: an alternative sociology?	80
	The aims of ethnomethodology	84
	The ethnomethodological critique of professional sociology	86
	Ethnomethodological presuppositions and major constructs	92
	Methodology and methods	100
	Findings	108
7	Ethnomethodology: a phenomenological sociology?	115
	Consciousness and constitution	118
	Experience, meaning, and the self	122
	The life-world	127
	Methodology and methods	131
	A phenomenological sociology?	133
8	The idea of phenomenological sociology	137
	The reflexive understanding of social reality	139
	Sociological understanding and social action	153
	Cultural crisis and the ideal of phenomenological sociology	161
	Notes	163
	Bibliography	198
	Author index	215
	Subject index	217