Acknowledgements

Although writing the 'acknowledgements' section comes at the end of the very hard business of writing a book as one of the 'small' tasks one must do, I actually very much welcome the chance to say my thanks to scholars and friends whose help and support I have had. And I have no doubt at all about whom I should mention first and above all others. To put it very simply and briefly, I am deeply grateful to Edward Tiryakian for years of friendship, counsel and intellectual inspiration.

Others have helped me with particular chapters. I am of course, very thankful for the contributions made by Robert Reiner and Ian Hamnett and they have both helped me in ways which have gone beyond the particular chapters they wrote.

Theo Nichols splattered red ink over several drafts of chapter 2 and forced me to clarify the arguments.'

Sandra Acker helped a great deal by taking me through much of the terrain in the sociology of education, and commenting with great skill on drafts of chapter 5.

Sue Allen Mills and Francis Brooke of CUP have earned my thanks too.

And finally I want to record a heartfelt public thank you to Jackie Bee, Pauline Tilley and Sue Palmer.
